10. As one of the considerations for the indivisible and non-exclusive license herein and hereby granted, Licensee hereby acknowledges only until February 10, 1937, the date of the expiration of the said Letters Patent number 1,330,413, the validity of the aforesaid Utzman patents and all of the said Letters Patent, granted and to be granted on applications for patents specified in Exhibit A, and only in so far as each and every of said Letters Patent relate to plaster board and/or gypsum wallboard, and agrees that it will not at any time prior to February 10, 1937, the date of the expiration of said Letters Patent number 1,330,413, whether before or after the termination of this license, in so far only as they relate to plaster board and/or gypsum wallboard, directly or indirectly, by itself, through or together with another or others, contest the validity of either or any of said Letters Patent or the title thereto of Licensor, or question in any way the prima facie scope of either or any of said Letters Patent; but it is expressly understood that the Licensee shall have full right to contest the priority, novelty or pantentability of the subject matter of any and all of the claims of the applications for letters patent specified in Exhibit A in accordance with customary patent office procedure to the same extent as though this agreement had never been entered into.

11411 to be by Licensee kept and performed, then Licensor, at its election, may serve upon Licensee notice of intention to terminate the license herein granted, which notice shall specify the alleged neglect, failure or refusal; and if Licensee, within thirty (30) days from the date of the delivery of said notice, shall not have paid to Licensor the license fees or royalties then due and payable in accordance with the terms hereof if specified in said notice; or within such thirty (30) day period shall not have made and kept the books of account and records hereinbefore mentioned if specified in said notice; or within such thirty (30) day period shall not have permitted Licensor to examine said books of account and records as hereinbefore provided if specified in said notice; or within thirty (30) days after receipt of such notice shall not have marked said plaster board or gypsum wallboard manufactured by it subsequent to the receipt of such notice "Patented", with the dates of the patents, or marked or invoiced the same as "seconds", as hereinbefore provided if specified in said notice; or shall, after the receipt of such notice, fail in good faith to comply with the conditions contained in paragraph 1 hereof, in the sale of plaster board and/or gypsum wallboard embodying the improvements set forth and claimed in said Utzman Patent number 1,034,746, in case Licensor shall exercise the right therein reserved by it, if specified in said notice, then in either of such events the said license and all rights acquired by Licensee hereunder shall be and become cancelled and terminated without the necessity of any court action; provided, however, that Licensee shall not be relieved thereby from paying to Licensor any license fees or royalties accrued hereunder at the time of such termination; and provided further that should a difference of opinion arise at any time under this agreement between the parties hereto as to the validity of the grounds for 11412 any default that may be specified in said notice, the Licensor shall in such case not be privileged to declare a default hereunder on account of any such alleged default specified in said notice with respect to which a difference of opinion has arisen as aforesaid, until and unless the same has first been settled by arbitration as hereinafter provided. In such case of a difference of opinion, Licensee shall, within said thirty (30) day period, first state in writing to Licensor wherein and in what respect such difference of opinion shall consist and shall at the same time appoint in writing one person as an arbitrator and the Licensor shall thereupon appoint another person as an arbitrator and in case the two persons so appointed shall not agree, within thirty (30) days after such appointment, upon the difference of opinion which shall have arisen, then the two persons so appointed shall appoint a third person, and the decision of a majority of the three arbitrators so appointed shall constitute a final settlement of the said difference of opinion and be binding upon both the Licensor and the Licensee; provided, further, that in case the difference of opinion above mentioned shall constitute a difference of opinion as to the amount of the royalties or license fees to be paid hereunder then the Licensee shall first pay or offer to pay the amount of such license fees or royalties which it then admits is due and payable in accordance with the terms hereof and the acceptance thereof by the Licensor shall not waive its rights in the controversy with respect thereto. Upon the determination of the said dispute by the said arbitrators as aforesaid, then if the Licensee shall fail or refuse to comply with the terms of the award or finding made by the said arbitrators within thirty (30) days from the date of such award or finding, in the event such award or finding is against the Licensee, then the Licensor 11413 may at its election terminate and cancel this license.

In the event of default hereunder by the Licensee and notice of such default is served on Licensee by Licensor, as herein provided, and after service of such notice Licensee shall cure such default as herein provided, the same shall constitute a nullification of the said notice by the Licensor as though the same had not been served. In case at any time Licensee shall commit any act of bankruptcy then the license hereunder shall immediately be and become cancelled and terminated, but Licensor shall not thereby be prevented from collecting all license fees or royalties accrued hereunder at the time of such termination. Failure on the part of Licensor to notify Licensee of a breach of this license contract as aforesaid or to terminate said license because of such breach shall not constitute a waiver of Licensor's right to terminate said license at a later time in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph. Licensor may specifically enforce this contract or any of the terms, conditions and covenants hereof, by injunction or in such other manner as may be provided by law,

12. Any notice to be given under the terms hereof may be served upon the Licensee by mailing the same to the Licensee, postage prepaid, addressed to it at its last known principal office, and the deposit of any such notice in the United States mails, postage prepaid and so addressed, shall constitute service of said notice upon the Licensee.

13. It is understood and agreed that if at any time during the term hereof the Licensee shall, in the judgment of the Licensor, suffer substantial detriment by reason of any infringement upon the part of any person or persons of the said patents, whether now or hereafter issued, under which this license is granted, the Licensor will afford the Licensee such reasonable protection as in the judgment of the 11414 Licensor shall be necessary or proper; and in case the Licensor shall grant to any infringer, or to any other person, any license under said patents upon terms more favorable than those granted hereunder to this Licensee, then it will grant to this Licensee a license on the same terms.

14. The terms "plaster board" and "gypsum wallboard" wherever used in this agreement, shall be understood to mean plaster board and gypsum wallboard of every kind having the structural characteristics of plaster board or gypsum wallboard, as now commercially recognized, and with fibrous or paper covering on or adjacent to both sides, but the terms shall not be construed to mean precast slabs manufactured from gypsum mixtures that are more than one and one-half (1½) inches in thickness and which do not have a protected edge either in whole or in part.

15. This license and all of the covenants and agreements hereof shall be binding upon and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of the parties hereto, but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to permit an assignment hereof by the Licensee except as hereinabove specifically provided.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have caused these presents to be signed by their respective Presidents, attested by their respective Secretaries, and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed, in duplicate, the day and year first above written.

Re: Perforated Gypsum Lath

Att. Mr. H. H. Van Hagan and Mr. G. A. Hoggatt

GENTLEMEN:—

We have Mr. Van Hagan's letter of February 26 enclosing memorandum from report on meeting of the board licensees held in New York on February 20 and Mr. Hoggatt's letter of February 29 recounting his conferences with Dr. L. S. Wells and Dr. Emley of the Bureau of Standards regarding the tests described in Bureau of Standards' Technologic Paper #70. Since receiving these letters we have reviewed our files relating to the Roos patent #1,938,354 including the opinion which we addressed to Mr. Straub on December 27, 1933.

I am still of the opinion that the Roos patent is completely invalid. It is a patent for empirical formulae and empirical formulae are ordinarily not patentable since they are within the ordinary skill of any competent research man in the particular art in which the work is done. As I said in my opinion of December 27, 1933, given the Rader patent cited in the file history of the Roos patent and the problem of making a practical commercial perforated plasterboard for the purpose of keying the plaster to the board, with the fire-resistance problem also put up to the plaster-11420 board and plaster man, any one of them would reach practically the same result as Roos reached.

At the time this opinion was given we did not have before us the history of the practical work that had been done along this line in California. Apparently also the Bureau of Standards, when it made certain tests around about February, 1933, did not know that the California perforated plasterboard had been on the market for a number of years, since in their Technical News Bulletin No. 190 they made the statement "Although perforated plasterboard had been used experimentally as early as 1915 (Bureau of Standards' Technologic Paper #70) it had not become commercially available until within the past year."

Since we gave our opinion of December 27, 1933, there has been a tendency in the courts, the Supreme Court included, to raise the standards of invention, that is, to require a much higher degree of ingenuity and originality in anything which is to be held to constitute an invention. As a result of this tendency, orders have been issued in the Patent Office to stiffen up on examinations so that I doubt if now this Roos patent could get through the Patent Office in its present form, if at all.

I think the entire patent could be completely ignored with perfect confidence in the outcome of any litigation involving it. It might be expensive to do so, because patent litigation is necessarily expensive, and it might be unwise to do so from the standpoint of commercial policy since the patent might be useful, if acquiesced in, for stabilizing the manufacture and sale of plasterboard lath coming within its terms.

11421 In any event, you can safely ignore altogether the first three claims of the patent, which are completely functional and do not define anything that could be said to come definitely within their terms. I think undoubtedly that with the right consistency of plaster the plasterboard shown in the Makowski Patent 1,349,778, granted August 17, 1920, on an application filed September 7, 1917, would completely anticipate these three functional claims. Moreover, it is to be noted that this Makowski patent is not limited to any particular size of hole or thickness of board and that persons making the Makowski wall board are entitled to use any size hole that they desire to. In the drawings of the Makowski application as filed the holes shown were apparently about one inch in their smallest diameter since they appear as one-half inch holes in the printed patent. The drawings of an application are reduced to one-quarter size when printing the patent, that is, each dimension of the drawing is reduced one-half.

When considering, if you wish to consider, avoiding the Roos patent by using dimensions other than defined in the claims of the Roos patent or by using dimensions such as were in public use long before the Roos patent and such as are illustrated in the sample of plasterboard received from the West Coast which we have here, you have to consider also avoiding the Makowski patent which still has somewhat over a year to run. This patent expires August 17, 1937.

Claim 1, for example, of the Makowski patent reads as follows:

11422 "1. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of fiber, allowing the same to stand until dry, and then punching holes through the completed board."

There are seven claims in the Makowski patent, some of the others of which you might also infringe if you approximated the Makowski construction.

U. S. Gypsum tries to get away from the Makowski patent by boring the holes instead of punching them. Their file wrapper shows that they had in the original application claims to the process of making the board as well as claims to the article. When they cancelled the process or method claims which covered the stacking of the lath and simultaneously drilling a plurality of perforations completely through the bundle, among other things, they stated in the remarks accompanying the amendment cancelling the claims that "a divisional application will be filed covering the subject-matter thereof". We are not advised at present as to whether such an application has matured into a patent, or not.

I would suggest that if you wish to avoid the patent that you make up some experimental board and give it the necessary tests to determine how important the particular dimensions recited in the claims of the Roos patent are since apparently after August of next year the field will be pretty wide open for making a perforated plasterboard if, in fact, it is not already wide open in view of the Rader and other earlier patents. It may be, of course, that U. S. Gypsum and its licensees will try to get the claims of the Roos patent written into the specifications of the fire prevention codes of various cities and thus practically force you either 11423 to use these particular dimensions or fight the patent. If this is to be prevented, someone will have to demonstrate that their talk about the importance of these particular relationships, size of hole and spacing of holes is more or less "hot air" and that other factors such as nature and consistency of the plaster, etc. may make other hole sizes and hole spacings just as effective for slowing up fires.

It seems to me that it might be wise to have a round table conference on this whole situation so that we may know a little more definitely just what you want to do, whether to play along with U. S. Gypsum, defy their patent, or avoid it so that we may be in a better position to give you definite advice.

Very truly yours,

H. Dorsey Spencer

Re: U. S. Gypsum Co. Patent 1,938,354, Roos, Granted Dec. 5, 1933; Application filed Mar. 15, 1933.

DEAR MR. STRAUB:—

We have obtained and examined the file history of the above patent and find that the only recorded actions by the Patent Office in the case were a requirement for division and an affirmation of the requirement for division and the notice of allowance. The principal work on the case was done at oral interviews with the examiner.

The case as filed contained 24 claims, of which claims 21 to 24 inclusive were claims to the method of producing the perforations or the perforated plasterboard. The requirement for division was between the method claims and the article claims which are now in the patent. The claims of the patent are the article claims originally filed, with very slight amendments, claim 7, however, having been rewritten and considerably amplified.

When making the requirement for division the examiner cited 6 patents, as follows:

228,939	Rogers	907,876	Rader
767,362	Phillips	1,123,304	Jester
694,111	Schratwieser	1,569,947	Buttress

11425 Of these six patents, two related to the method, and four related to perforated lath boards, the most pertinent being the patent to Rader 907,876, which we have already discussed as a result of the search that was made sometime ago, and the patent to Buttress 1,569,947, January 19, 1926. The patent to Rader shows an ordinary plasterboard with straight perforations through it for keying the plaster to the plasterboard. The patent to Buttress also shows a plasterboard with perforations through it for keying the plaster to the plasterboard, the Buttress perforations, however, being countersunk on each side so that, as set forth in the claim, the openings are "formed of two frusto-conical co-axial holes having their smallest diameter near the center of the board."

I do not believe that the entire Roos patent discloses a single thing that rises to the dignity of invention but it is a patent that has a tremendous nuisance value. Given the Rader patent and the problem of making a practical commercial perforated plasterboard for the purpose of keying the plaster to the board, I haven't the slightest doubt that any practical plasterboard and plaster man would have reached substantially the same solution of the problem as reached by Roos and would have considered it a part of his technical work, not a problem requiring the exercise of inventive ingenuity. There is always a gamble, however, in trying to get this fact across to the ordinary federal district judge who, before he goes on the bench, has had no contact with patent law, and therefore, as I said above, the patent has a tremendous nuisance value and there is a remote chance that some district judge, impressed by 11426 the commercial demand for this type of board which may be created as a result of new building codes, might sustain the patent, and that a Circuit Court of Appeals, equally impressed, might affirm his decision and thus give the U. S. Gypsum Company an undeserved adjudication of a patent based upon a mere routine solution of an ordinary technical problem.

The Roos patent is based upon an alleged discovery that, to make a practical commercial perforated plasterboard lath, a newly discovered relationship between the thickness of the board, the diameter of the perforation and the area of unperforated material between any four perforations marking the four corners of a square must be utilized. This relationship is defined in various ways in the claims and in the first three claims it is defined functionally. In other words, there is no definite relationship set forth.

For example, claim 1 calls for a wall construction which includes a perforated plasterboard lath and plaster coating on the face of the lath and extending into and through the perforations. It then goes on to say that the perforations extend completely through the lath and are of such size and spacing that they are completely filled with portions of the plaster in the normal acts of applying the plaster and that the plaster goes through and forms keys which protrude beyond and engage with the inner face of the board, the size of each key and the area of plaster supported thereby, that is, the area on the other face of the board, being co-related to retard calcination of the keys considerably beyond the calcination of the plaster coating when the construction is subjected to continued high temperature. The claim further defines the area supported by the keys 11427 as sufficiently large to provide spaced rows of uniformly positioned perforations and defines the rows as being positioned to avoid the supporting members, that is, the studding spaced at standard distances, when the boards are supported thereon in normal adjacent aligned or staggered relation. The claim also defines the perforations as being of a number and distribution not materially to weaken the board in any direction.

I cannot conceive of a claim that defines a perforated plasterboard lath construction that would be reached by any practical plasterboard man making such a construction for the market any better than this claim does. In other words, I do not believe that there is the slightest trace of invention set forth in the claim and yet the Patent Office has allowed it, the patent is presumptively valid, it is held by a large and aggressive organization that it would therefore be a very costly matter to make exactly what is shown in the patent.

The weakness of the prior art as shown in the patents listed in the file is that the Rader patent was solicited by one of the poorest firms of advertising solicitors that ever existed, a firm that has fortunately now gone out of existence, and it seems quite probable that what they have shown and described was probably not what Miss or Mrs. Rader invented. I note that she was living, at the time the application was filed, at Upper Monclair, N. J. If still living, it would seem to be advisable to get into touch with her and find out what she actually made and whether or not it was ever used.

The patent to Buttress was solicited by an attorney in California whom I know and it seems quite probable 11428 that from Buttress or his attorney something might be learned as to the use of perforated plasterboard lath. The Buttress patent shows some of the perforations coming over the studs. This, of course, in Buttress was not objectionable because Buttress has a lock by reason of his countersunk holes. Buttress does show the plaster going through the perforated board and forming a key on the back side and shows a relationship of the size of the holes to the thickness of the board that is the practical equivalent of that shown in the Roos patent. The Buttress patent, however, shows what I would estimate to be a considerably larger number of holes and necessarily closer together.

As a practical board, of course, Buttress' board is more costly to manufacture because of the countersinknig of the holes on both faces. Rader, however, shows a perfectly straight smooth hole. In this connection, I might add that in dividing out claims 21 to 24 inclusive, a statement was made that a divisional application was made to cover the process. I assume that this has been done.

The Roos process of making the holes consists essentially of drilling the lath in the bundle by means of twist drills that have the usual outline cutting lips on the sides in order to make a smooth cut through the paper before the drill proper hits the plasterboard.

Certain-teed's problem as I see it, if they do not care to pay tribute to the U. S. Gypsum Company, is to let its practical plasterboard and plaster man study this Roos patent to see how much of it is pure hot air. It seems probable that there are other relationships besides those defined in the claims of this patent that will produce practical results. Certain of the claims are related specifically 11429 to and practically solely to the arrangement of the perforations to dodge the studding. I do not believe that these claims could be sustained, this being such an obvious thing to do when it is desired that the plaster go through the perforation and form a key on the back face of the lath.

I would suggest that you send the enclosed copy of the Roos patent to Mr. Van Hagen or someone equally conversant with problems of this sort and then ask him to come in and talk to us as to whether or not the conditions set forth in the patent are essential from a practical commercial viewpoint.

In connection with the claims, certain of them contain a definition that is evidently based on an erroneous mathematical computation. For example, claim 6 says "said perforations having a diameter of approximately twice the thickness of the lath and symmetrically spaced to provide an area between any four adjacent perforations in the same lath and between any two perforations of an adjacent lath and any two of the same lath of approximately 36 times the cross-sectional area of the perforations."

In the specification it is stated that the perforations are 3/4ths of an inch in diameter and that they are spaced on the board 4" from the center of one perforation to the center of the next. This would give an area of 16 square inches between the centers of any four perforations constituting the four corners of a square. There would be deducted from this area to give the area of the solid board between the perforations, a quarter of a perforation on each corner making a whole perforation altogether, which would have to be subtracted from the 16 square inches to give the area of the solid material. This would, therefore, give an area to perforation ratio of 35 to 1 instead of 36 to 1.

The error, however, is probably not important in view of the fact that the proper spacing has been fully set forth in the specification.

Very truly yours,

H. DORSEY SPENCER

DEAR MR. SADLER:

Referring to your price bulletin applying on Metallized Gypsum Board, effective March 1, 1937, wish you would advise me the mill price applying to points in the State of Missouri. I am of the opinion that this State should be included under Item 1 of this price list, but would like to have this confirmed by you.

Also want to call your attention to the fact that a dealer at Warrensburg, Missouri, states he has been quoted a price of $26.43 on Metallized Lath for delivery to that point and it has been necessary for me to meet such price.

We would like to have the above information for future reference.

DEAR MR. MOYLAN:

In line with our conversation, I attach two estimate sheets, one covering the cost of the equipment required to make lightweight foam board, and the other sheet giving the formula from which you can figure the savings per thousand feet by use of our system.

You will note the estimate for equipment is greater than the figure we discussed when I was in your office. In giving the figure I did at the time, I assumed that you would have some of this equipment now in use in your plant. If you have such equipment available, the expense will be substantially reduced. This feature of the installation can be gone into thoroughly by our engineer in the event you conclude to sign a license.

This estimate does not include the removal of present equipment, changes in bins, conveyors, floor levels, etc., as we have no information on which to base such calculations. Our engineer will, however, be able to give you a close figure before the work is started, after he has had an opportunity to study conditions surrounding the wet end of your machine.

We know nothing about your present power consumption on the wet end of your machine. Our system calls for two motors, the demand on one varies between 7½ and 20 and averages 15 HP at the maximum. The demand on the other varies between 5 and 15 and averages about 9. If this is more power than you are using, you can charge the difference against this system and deduct it from the estimated savings.

On the second estimate sheet we have taken such information as we have available regarding the wet end of your board machine and set up the present and proposed weights.

We have estimated your cost of stucco which you can correct to the exact figure.
We have shown a charge of five cents a thousand for labor preparing the foam and starch mixtures which you may not require, in fact it is possible we may be able to reduce the number of men employed around the wet end of the machine by two or three men per shift.

11433 The freight savings we have taken at the figure discussed in your office. This you will, of course, change to the figure you find correct from your experience. The royalty of 2% shown is correct but we may not have used your correct net f.o.b. mill price. We have also deducted from the estimated savings the royalties for perforating and bundling. These charges obviously apply only to the products that are bundled or perforated.

The estimates attached show a substantial saving after deducting the royalties chargeable at the present time. You will recall I stated that these royalties under the main license decline to 1% on July 7, 1941.

As to the mixers which we propose furnishing. These mixers are the product of years of study by the company and large expenditures for engineering and experimental work. The mixers are patented and we do not sell them to anyone but lease them with a license covering their use. The annual rental for these mixers is $375 a year which, on the basis of an annual production of 37,500,000 feet, amounts to a charge of one cent per thousand.

It is my belief that the installation of this equipment will bring other savings which we cannot estimate without knowing more about your operation. When you reach the point where you are ready to actively consider taking the license, we will be willing to send our engineer to make exact estimates of cost for the installation and more complete estimates of the savings that are possible through the adoption of this system.

I trust this gives you the information you want. If it does not, please do not hesitate to ask for what additional information you require.

Very truly yours,

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

JOHN F. MAKOWSKI, of SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, ASSIGNOR OF ONE-HALF TO JAMES A. LEVERSALEE, OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

WALL-BOARD AND PROCESS OF MANUFACTURING THE SAME.

1,349,778. Specification of Letters Patent. Patented Aug. 17, 1920.

Application filed September 7, 1917, Serial No. 190,121. Renewed December 20, 1919. Serial No. 346,044.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, JOHN F. MAKOWSKI, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, have made a new and useful Improvement in Wall-Boards and Processes of Manufacturing the Same; and I do hereby declare the following to be a full, clear, concise, and exact description of the same.

The invention relates to a new and useful art particularly to means for perforating stable or dry wall-board; and to the process of forming holes or recesses therein adapted to act as key holes for bonding finishing plaster coats applied to the wall board, and to a new article of manufacture.

Among the objects of this invention are to provide means for economically and effectively processing a wall board of the nature described, to produce a new article of manufacture with improved qualities and at greatly reduced cost of production; to produce a wall board to which the finishing plaster can be applied and securely keyed with the minimum amount of plaster and waste, and to produce a wall board fire and water proof on the side opposite to that to which the plaster is applied. Other objects and advantages will appear as the description progresses.

In this specification and the annexed drawings, the invention is illustrated in the form considered to be the best, but it is to be understood that the invention is not limited to such form because it may be embodied in other forms, and it is also to be understood that in and by the claims following the description, it is desired to cover the invention in whatever form it may be embodied.

In the accompanying four sheets of drawings:

Fig. 2 is a front view of the same.

Fig. 3 is a side elevation detail in cross-section of the perforating mechanism on the line III—III of Fig. 2.

Fig. 5 is a plan view from above of the same taken on the line V—V, Fig. 1.

Fig. 6 is a front elevation of the punching mechanism in cross-section on the line VI—VI, Fig. 3.

Fig. 7 is a plan view from above of the perforating machine taken from Fig. 1.

Fig. 8 is an enlarged fragmentary detail of the counter-sinking punch and die for forming the perforations in the wall board, Sheet 1.

Fig. 9 is a plan view of a fragmentary section of plaster board constructed and perforated in accordance with this invention.

Fig. 10 is a fragmentary detail view in cross section on the line X—X, Fig. 9, showing the laminated structure of the wall board.

Fig. 11 is a fragmentary detail diagrammatically illustrating the integral key formed on the casting of plaster when applied to the wall board as it would remain were the wall board removed.

Fig. 12 is a fragmentary detail in cross section of a hollow punch.

Fig. 13 is detail similar to Fig. 10, illustrating the form of recess formed by the hollow punch.

Broadly stated, the process of producing plaster wall board consists in flowing the plastic core composed of gypsum or other compositions in the unstable state, between two reinforcing sheets of prepared pulp paper, then rolling or pressing it into flat sheets, resulting in a core X of plaster faced on both sides by the sheets of paper X'—X', the whole forming a sheet of uniform thickness throughout, that is trimmed to size and permitted to set or season before being marketed. Other forms consist of slabs of plastic composition reinforced with fibrous and other matter. Because of the unstable condition to this product in the process of its manufacture, it has been found impracticable to form holes in it because the unstable plastic core would crush and destroy the marketability or practicability of the product. I am aware, however, that wall boards of different composition have been formed with perforations or holes therethrough, such holes being uniform in cross-section and having parallel sides.

In the process of forming plaster wall

boards in accordance with this invention, the dry or stabilised board is passed through a machine wherein it is punched, the punched portion being removed entirely from the board, as will be hereinafter more fully described.

In detail the construction illustrated in the drawings consists of an automatic punching machine, adaptable to processing wall board in accordance with this invention, having a bed 1 supported upon a suitable base 2, to which the upright sides 3—3 are bolted on opposite sides of the bed. The reciprocating breast beam 4 engages these guides 3 and is guided thereby in its vertical reciprocations. The cam shaft 5 is suitably journaled in bearings supported by the guides 3—3 and provided with the eccentrics 6 (see Fig. 4) engaged by the adjustable connecting rod 7 pivoted at 8 in the breast beam 4, whereby the rotation of the camshaft 5 causes the vertical reciprocation of the breast beam 4. The cam shaft is back-geared through the gear 9 enmeshed with the driving pinion 10, fixed on the drive shaft 11, which is provided with a pulley 12 driven by the belt 13 engaging a pulley on the motor 14, the proper gearing being interposed between the motor and the cam shaft to give the necessary power and speed reduction. The breast beam 4 is provided with a series of alined male punches 15, fixed therein and cooperating with the female dies 16, to perforate the plaster board 17 set therebetween. To reduce the applied power necessary to perforate the board, and to prevent possible transverse cracking thereof in the punching process, it is advisable to arrange the male punches so that they perforate the board serially; this is easily accomplished by progressively lengthening the punches from the center to the edge as is illustrated in Fig. 6 or vice versa, the length being varied from the cutting edge to the tapered shoulder at 18, so that these shoulders will all strike the board simultaneously. It is important that these shoulders all strike the board simultaneously to bevel the edges of the holes by compression, whereby the resultant holes are of greater diameter at one surface of the board than at the opposite side, for reasons that will hereinafter be described. Two rows of punches can be provided as illustrated in Fig. 3, arranged in off-set relation out of longitudinal alinement and placed a uniform distance apart, the board being fed forward the space of two rows of holes at each operation.

The intermittent feeding mechanism comprises the two traction rollers 19 and 20 between which the plaster board 17 is fed. These traction rollers are fixed upon their respective shafts 21—22 and are rotated in unison by the gears 23—24. The shaft 21 is rotated by a ratchet 25 fixed thereon engaged by the pawl 26, pivoted on the arm 27 formed on the hub 28 rotatable on the shaft 21. The hub 28 is operated by the cable 29 wrapped thereabout and having its opposite ends fixed to the lever 30 and the frame of the machine at 31 respectively. The lever is pivoted at 32 and rests upon the cam 33 fixed on the shaft 5. The cam 33 is so timed that the rise of the punches out of the board, brings the cam under the lever 30 which is raised thereby, which exerts a pull on the cable 29 to rotate the hub 28 which carries the ratchet 25 forward to rotate the traction wheels 19 and 20, pushing the board forward a distance equal to the distance between the transverse rows of holes. This distance may be accurately regulated by varying the position on the lever 30 at which the cable 29 is attached.

When the cam 33 has passed underneath the lever 30 the tension of the spring 34 returns the arm 27 to the operative position for the next operation, the ratchet 25 returning without engaging the ratchet.

The board 17 laid on the receiving table 35 is supported on the rollers 36 from which it is conveniently fed between the feed rollers 19 and 20 beneath the punching machine and ejected onto the delivery table 37.

In producing the type of board illustrated in Fig. 9 having the backing sheet 38 placed thereon, means are provided in connection with the punching machine to apply this sheet as the board passes through the machine. It is best accomplished by providing the sheet 38 in rolls as at 39, Figs. 1 and 2, mounted upon a cross shaft 40, suitably journaled in a superstructure on the machine. The sheet 38 is fed behind the roller 41, over the top of the roller 42 and carried down to contact with the top face of the board. The roller 42 is journaled in the trough 43 containing paste submerging the lower portion of the roller 42, by which means a coating of paste is transferred to the surface of the paper 38 tractively passing over the roller 42. Before reaching the delivery table 37, the board 17 passes between the compression rollers 44 and 45, geared together and driven by the sprocket chain 46 engaging a sprocket 47 on the shaft 21 of the feed roll 19, whereby these compression rolls operate in unison with the feed roll. In starting, the end of the paper 38 is carried down in front of the rolls 44 and 45 between which it is pushed by the approaching end of the board 17 on its travel through the machine. The roll 44 presses the paper 38 against the upper surface of the board 17 to which it is caused to adhere by the paste covering one side of the holes 48 to form recesses in the wall boards, resulting in the product illustrated in Fig. 9.

It is the particular function of the paper 38 which has been previously water proofed to make the back side of the board impervious to moisture to prevent sweating and to prevent the emergence of the key formed by the applied coat of plaster protruding through the hole 48 in the board 17. Where it is desired to produce a plaster board having the advantages as set forth, plus the additional advantages of being fire-proof, the paper 38 can be treated with suitable fire-proofing solution, or it may be composed of asbestos or another non-inflammable material, by which means the plaster board having a non-inflammable back and a coating of non-inflammable plaster on the opposite side forms a fire proof wall or partition. So far as I am aware I am the first to produce such a wall in this manner.

To improve the keying qualities of the hole 48, they are countersunk by the tapered shoulder 16 on the male punches as previously described, producing a hole smaller in diameter on the plaster side of the board than on the back which is covered by the sheet 38. This results in forming a key integral with the plaster Y and taking the form Y^1 as illustrated in Fig. 11, the form of the hole forming a clench or rivet-like bond between the plaster Y and the wall board 17, in addition to the natural adhesion between the plaster and the surface of the wall board between the openings, the dove-tail shape of the key Y^1 insuring a mechanical bond in addition to its adhesion to the surrounding wall board. The countersinking of the holes has the further advantage that it can be made to fracture or shatter the adjacent plaster core to improve the keying qualities of the bond; particularly where small, straight, or inclined holes are punched. The punches may be of forms to punch holes of any desired shape and the holes may be variously spaced.

In Fig. 12 is illustrated a hollow punch 50 adapted to be forced into the wall board through the paper X' and the core X having the paper X^2 intact. The rise of the punch lifts the punching 51 out of the wall board. This punching 51 is ejected from the punch by the stripper 52 actuated by the expansion of the spring 53, the stripper being held in assembly by the slots 54 engaging the screws 55 in the punch 50; this form of punch forms a recess such as 56, see Fig. 13. If it is desired in addition to puncture the paper backing X^2 as at 57, the punch 56 can be combined with the punch 50 to cooperate with the die 39 to punch the hole 57, which permits the plaster coating to pass through the wall board and clench. This hollow type of punch is desirable when the wall board is to be treated in the moist or semi-stable state as it comes from the machine within which it is fabricated.

While I have laid particular stress upon the advantages of punching wall board after it has set or dried, in which stable state it is more easily processed and produces a superior article for the purpose; I do not wish to be understood as limiting this invention thereby, as it can be punched during its various stages of production or curing with various results.

Having thus described this invention, what I claim and desire to secure by Letters Patent is:

1. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of paper, allowing the same to stand until dry, and then punching holes through the completed board.

2. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of paper, pressing the same into flat sheets, allowing said sheets to stand until dry, and then punching holes through the dry sheets.

3. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of paper, allowing the same to stand until dry, and then punching tapered holes through the dry board.

4. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of paper, allowing the same to stand until dry, then punching holes through the completed board, and enlarging said holes by compression.

5. A process of manufacturing wall board comprising flowing a core of plastic material between reinforcing sheets of paper, allowing the same to stand until dry, and then punching holes through the dry board in such manner as to shatter the substance of the board adjacent to the hole.

6. The process of treating dry wall board consisting in punching holes therethrough and covering one side of said holes to form a recess in said wall board.

7. An article of manufacture consisting of a sheet of wall board composed of a core of dry plaster between reinforcing sheets having holes punched therethrough while in the dry state, and a sheet of fire proof material applied to one side of said board after said punching operation.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand at San Francisco, California, this 7th day of August, 1917.

Attention: Mr. Emil Hansen.

Gentlemen:—

You will find enclosed copies of our General Sales Bulletins numbers three and four giving complete information on our new Board prices—also the policy to be followed in quoting prices to the dealer trade.

We believe the bulletins are self explanatory insofar as concerns method of arriving at delivered prices. However, please note particularly the policy to be followed in submitting prices. All prices must be quoted for immediate acceptance and for immediate shipment and subject ot change without notice. Please make no price committments or price guarantees beyond a period of immediate or rush delivery. Should any of your customers want you to accept future orders calling for shipments beyond immediate delivery, you may accept such orders only on the condition that the price will be subject to the price in effect when shipment moves.

On such orders as you send us for shipment to your dealer customers, we shall allow you the following rates of commission:

Gypsolite Wallboard	10%	Oakfield mill basing price.
Gypsolite Sheating	10%	" " " "
Star Gypsum Wallboard	10%	" " " "
Universal Gypsum Lath, all sizes	7%	" " " "
Gypsum Wallboard, second or recuts	7%	" " " "

All shipments made to your warehouse in Syracuse will be invoiced to you at our regular dealer's price for Syracuse delivery, this for the reason that you do a retail business as well as a wholesale business out of Syracuse. Under the terms of our license agreement, we are not permitted to allow you any jobbing commission on retail sales, however, we are permitted and shall be glad 11445 to give you commissions per the above schedule on such wholesale business as you do out of your Syracuse warehouse. In order to secure commission on the wholesale business you do in Syracuse, it will be necessary for you to send us at teh end of each month a statement of such wholesale deliveries, and in this statement show the date of the delivery, the dealer's name, address of dealer, grade of Broad delivered, and quantity. Your statement will have to be itemized in this manner for each delivery. There is a further condition in our license agreement which makes it necessary for us to be permitted to check your books or records on such wholesale deliveries from your Syracuse warehouse in the event such audit is necessary at any time.

We are today writing your other sales offices supplying them with price bulletins and the commission arrangement as above outlined.

If there is anything in the bulletins that is not entirely clear to you, will you pleaseadvise the writer here and he will be very glad indeed to explain anything not entirely clear to you.

Kindly continue to send your orders to our New York Office for handling with the plant the same as you have been doing in the past.

Yours very truly,

11447 Board Price Policy

In applying price shown on G.S.B. #3 dated 5/22/29, be governed by the following policy:

Prices listed are minimum mill basing prices and are F.O.B. following producing points:

Oakfield, N. Y.	Gypsum, Ohio	Ft. Dodge, Iowa	Acme, Texas
Plasterco, Va.	Grand Rapids, Mich.	Southard, Okla.	Sweetwater, Texas

Use lowest freight rate from above basing points to destination in figuring delivered price.

All board prices must be quoted F. O. B. destination freight allowed using the following weights at all basing points in determining freight per M Sq. Ft.

1/4" Board — 1250 lbs. per M. Sq. Ft.
3/8" " — 1850 " " " " "
1/2" " — 2250 " " " " "

Please note prices given are our minimum prices. Under no condition are you to quote or accept business at less than these minimum prices.

All board prices are to be quoted for immediate acceptance and for immediate shipment, and to be subject to change without notice.

Make no price commitments or price quarantees beyond period of immediate or rush delivery.

You may accept Board orders for future shipment subject, however, to price in effect at time of shipment. A future order is one calling for delivery beyond immediate or rush shipment.

All special competitive conditions must be reported to Chicago office for decision. Make no promises or statements that will commit the Company before passing such reports to Chicago for consideration.

Report on Fire Endurance Tests of Partitions with Facings of Plaster on Gypsum Lath

T. G. 3619-16; F. R. 1120

I. Purpose and Scope of Tests

Two fire endurance tests, Nos. 120 and 123, on load-bearing, wood-stud partitions faced with gypsum plaster on a perforated gypsum lath were made by the National Bureau of Standards in cooperation with the Schumacher Wall Board Corporation of Los Angeles, California. The gypsum laths for the two partitions were alike except for the spacing of the holes. The two gypsum plasters used differed widely in strength and time of set.

The partitions were 16 ft long and 10 ft 4 in. high. The top plates were bolted to the test frame and the bottom to the steel beam resting on hydraulic jacks. Spaces 1/2 in. in width were left between the ends of the partitions and the test frame. These spaces were lightly caulked on the fire exposed side with asbestos fiber.

The illustrations, fig 1 to 6, inclusive, show details of construction of the partitions and their appearance during and after the tests, the temperatures within the furnace, and within the partitions and on the unexposed surfaces. The principal results of the tests are given in table 1.

11449 Table 1. Summary of tests of wood-stud partitions faced with gypsum plaster on perforated gypsum lath for fire endurance under load.[1]

123	30	100	32	Load	62	Load-bearing or non-load bearing, 1 hour, combustible
				Limiting temp. max	70

[1] A load of 30550 lb was applied during the test until failure occurred.

[2] This value is the ratio of the area under the curve of average temperatures to the area under the standard reference curve expressed in percentage.

[3] Limit or rating as surface finish as per par. 24 (c) of the Standard Fire Test Specification.

II. Materials, Design and Construction of Partitions

1. Materials

The materials for the partitions, except the perforated gypsum lath and the lot of gypsum plaster used for facing the partition for test No. 123, were from local dealers stocks.

(a) Lumber—The framework of the partitions was of structural grade yellow pine. The trim was also of yellow pine.

(b) Lath.—The two lots of lath were alike in size and thickness, but the perforations differed. The boards were 16 3/16 by 48 in. by 3/8 in. thick.

2. Design and construction

(a) Framework:—The framework of each partition consisted of 2 by 4 in. studs spaced 16 in. on centers and toe nailed to 2 by 4 in. plates top and bottom. The blocking at mid height of the studs stayed the studs laterally and served as fire stops.

(b) Lathing.—The lath was placed across, and bearing on four studs, with four 13 gage nails, 1 1/4 in. long by 5/16 in. heads, to each bearing. The end joints between lath were staggered from course to course. The edges of the lath were not spaced apart in the construction of partition No. 120 but were spaced about 1/8 in. apart in No. 123.

(c) Grounds.—The thickness of the plaster was gaged to 1/2 in. by metal base beads along the bottom of the partitions and by nails driven into the studs at mid height and near the top.

(d) Plastering.—The gypsum plaster was mixed with sand in the proportions 1 part plaster to 2 parts sand by weight of the dry materials. The weight of water required to make a workable mix was two-thirds that of the dry gypsum plaster.

The scratch and brown coats of plaster were applied by the "double up" method; that is, by applying the second coat within a few minutes after the scratch coat had been applied and before set had begun. Nails for gaging the thickness of the plaster were removed from the fire exposed side before the plaster was set. The thickness of the sanded plaster was 7/16 in. which together with the 1/16 in. thickness of white finish totaled 1/2 in. over the lath.

11452 (e) Trim.—Yellow pine base boards were applied to each face by nailing through the lath and plaster into the studs.

(f) Workmanship.—The workmanship was like that found in local building practice.

III. Methods of Testing

1. Specifications

The tests were conducted in accordance with the requirements of the Specifications for Fire Tests of Building Construction and Materials of the American Standards Association except that no fire and hose test was made, previous tests having proven the adequacy of this type of construction in this respect.

2. Testing Equipment

The large wall testing equipment of the National Bureau of Standards was used for the tests. This comprises a gas-fired furnace with suitable movable frames into which the walls are built and seasoned for test. The frames employed were each equipped with four hydraulic jacks bearing on a beam to impose the test load.

The furnace is equipped with pyrometers to measure the temperature at nine points within the furnace chamber, at six points within the partition, and under nine asbestos pads on the unexposed surface of the partition. Chromel-alumel thermocouples and portable type potentiometers were used for indicating temperatures in comparison with the temperature of melting ice.

Deflections of the partitions during test were observed by measurements from three wires stretched between the top and bottom members of the test frames, one opposite the vertical center line and one 4 ft. each side of the center line.

3. Procedure

Each wall with its test frame was placed to form one wall of the combustion chamber of the furnace. In each test the fires were controlled to give temperatures conforming as nearly as possible to the standard reference curve. Loads were applied previous to starting the test fires and maintained until failure occurred, after which the pressure in the jacks was released to prevent collapse of the partition.

The fires were continued for a time after the first criterion of failure had been observed in order to obtain information beyond this limit.

11453 IV. Results of Tests

1. Test No. 120

This was a fire endurance test of a fully loaded 5 1/2 in. thick wood-stud partition, 16 ft long by 10 1/3 ft high, faced on both sides with 1/2 in. of 1:2 sanded gypsum plaster on 3/8 in. thick perforated gypsum lath. The completed partition was seasoned 40 days before being subjected to the test. The load applied was 30,550 lb. The test was made on November 24, 1937, the fire being continued one hour.

(a) Furnace temperature.—The furnace fire gave an exposure as measured by the area under the curve of average temperature, F, (fig 2a) of 101 percent of that derived from the area under the standard reference curve. The dashed lines above and below curve F show maximum and minimum temperatures indicated by the nine thermocouples exposed to the furnace fire.

(b) Partition temperatures.—The average of the temperatures indicated by the three thermocouples between the lath and the studs on the fire-exposed side of the partition, at 2 ft from the top opposite points 10 to 15, fig 1, is shown by curve 1 (fig 2a), and the maximum of the three by curve 1 max. The temperatures within the spaces between the studs are similarly shown by curves 2 and 2 max.

The average of the surface temperatures measured under the nine asbestos pads on the unexposed surface, and the maximum of the nine are shown by curves P and P max of the same figure. Curve R shows the temperature of the test room.

(c) Deflections.—The partition deflected 3/16 in. towards the fire during the first five minutes of the test after which the movement was in the opposite direction, passing through its original position between 10 and 20 min after the start of the test. The average deflection of the three points at mid height was 0.4 in. at 40 min. and at 50 min 3.4 in. The deflections were increasing rapidly at 50 1/2 min and the gage indicated a 10 percent drop in pressure in the jacks. The pressure was then reduced from 123 to 15 lb and the test continued.

(d) Effects of test, fire exposed side.—No cracks were seen on either side before the partition was placed in front of the furnace for test.

11454 The first cracking on the exposed side was across a 1 1/2 ft diameter bulge just above the base near the mid point of length at 15 1/2 min.

This was followed soon by a vertical crack 3 ft long at 3 1/2 ft opposite pad 7, fig. 1. At 20 min a bulge in the plaster 2 ft in diameter was observed in the north corner almost opposite pad 3. At 22 min the plaster in the lower north corner opposite pad 9 was bulged outwards. Although the plaster surface was much bulged and broken over nearly the entire surface at 23 min none fell until 35 1/2 min and at 37 min above one square yard of the lath was exposed. At 40 min 4 sq ft of the lath fell exposing the pine studs to the fire, and at 43 1/2 min about 80 sq ft had fallen. The volume of flame in the furnace at 55 min prevented any estimate of the quantity of lath and plaster remaining, but it was probably of negligible quantity.

The furnace fire was stopped at 1 hr and the fire in the burning studs quenched after the panel and frame had been pulled away from the furnace. Fig 3 shows the condition of the portion of the test specimen remaining as viewed from the fire exposed side.

(e) Effects of test, unexposed side.—Several cracks were observed in the upper part of the partition at 5 min after the start of the test. These were all very narrow. Steam, first seen at 4 min after the start of the test, flowed in considerable volume from various cracks and all margins a 14 min. Steam flow diminished gradually after this until 33 min after which time it was not visible.

After 40 min cracks which had appeared early in the test began to open somewhat and more appeared until the partition had deflected so much at 50 1/2 min that cracks were quite numerous.

After removal of the load cracking proceeded somewhat less rapidly. The general condition of the surface at 57 min is shown by fig. 1. As soon as the fire was stopped and the partition removed from the furnace water was applied to quench the fires in the burning studs.

(f) Failure.—Failure of the partition to support the load of 30,550 lb occurred at 50 1/2 min.

The allowable limits of temperature rise, 325°F (181°C) at one point, and 250°F (139°C) as the average rise at nine points, were both reached at 58 min.

11455 The limit of fire resistance of the lath and plaster on one side of the partition as an incombustible finish over combustible construction (wood studs) was reached at 34 1/2 min,

(g) Condition after test.—Figures 1 and 3 show the condition of the partition after failure. Little strength remained after the fire was quenched but there were no breaks of sufficient size to permit the passage of flame and hot gases in quantity.

2. Test No. 123

This, also, was a fire endurance test of a fully loaded, 5 1/2 in. thick partition, 16 ft long by 10 1/2 ft high, faced on both sides with 1/2 in. of 1:2 sanded gypsum plaster on 3/8 in. thick perforated gypsum lath. The completed partition was seasoned 30 days before being subjected to the test. The load applied was 30,550 lb. The test was made on March 17, 1938.

(a) Furnace temperature.—The furnace fire exposure as measured under the curve of average temperature, F, (fig 2b) was 100 percent.

The average of the surface temperatures measured under the nine asbestos pads on the unexposed surface, and the maximum of the nine, are shown by curves P and P max of the same figure. Curve R shows the temperature of the test room.

(c) Deflections.—The partition deflected 0.3 in. towards the fire at its mid point in the first 5 min and at 10 min had returned to its original position after which the deflections were away from the fire, reaching 0.3 in. at 1/2 hr and 1.5 in. at 57 min. At 61 min, just previous to failure under load, the deflections at the mid points of height were 2.1, 2.4 and 2.1 in., for points 4, 5 and 6, respectively.

(d) Effects of test, fire exposed side.—The pine base board started flaming at 2 1/2 min after the start of the test.

The first crack in the plaster on the fire exposed side was seen at 23 min. This resulted from bulging of the plaster at the central part of the panel. The plaster keys were broken off over an area 5 ft long by 2 ft high permitting the expanding plaster to buckle out and crack.
11456 Other cracks were observed at 29 1/2 and 30 min.

At 35 min about one square yard of plaster fell from the buckled area noted first above and one minute later the lath broke from an area of about one square foot exposing two studs to the fire.

At 40 min a 4-ft long strip of plaster 1 ft wide pulled away from the lath along the south vertical edge of the panel. At 44 min another small area of plaster fell exposing the lath over a total area of about 1 1/4 sq yd. At this time the fall of several square yards of plaster appeared imminent. A small area of lath fell at 46 min and large volumes of flame from burning wood filled the upper half of the furnace.

A large area of plaster fell from the north end of the panel at 56 min and at 58 min all the plaster then remaining fell from the fire exposed face.

The studs began to buckle under load at 62 min and at 63 min the pump supplying oil to the jacks was stopped. The load was reduced and the screw jacks set to prevent tilting of the loading beam on the rocker bearings. The fire was continued until 73 min when the gas was shut off from the burners. The wood studs which had been fully exposed to the fire for 15 min continued to burn vigorously.

The burning studs were sprayed with water from a garden hose nozzle about 6 min after the gas was shut off and at 10 min after the panel and frame were withdrawn from the furnace.

(e) Effects of test, unexposed side.—In the period from 6 to 10 min after the start of the test four narrow cracks appeared in the unexposed surface, the first being a vertical one from mid-height to the top of the panel near the center line. Six additional cracks were observed in the period from 11 min to 60 min, none of which were large. Figure 5 shows the condition of the unexposed surface after 1 hr exposure of the opposite side to fire.

Failure under load at 62 min caused outward deflection and several cracks. Figure 6 shows the condition of the panel at 77 1/2 min after the start of the test, or 4 1/2 min after the furnace fire was stopped.

(f) Failure.—Failure of the partition at 62 min came through its inability longer to sustain the imposed load while subjected to fire.

11457 The limiting rise of temperature of 325°F (181°C) at one point on the unexposed surface was observed at 70 min. The limiting rise of 250°F (139°C) as the average of the observed rises at nine points was not reached.

The limit of fire resistance of the lath and plaster on one side of the partition as an incombustible finish over combustible construction (wood studs) was 32 min.

(g) Condition after test.—The partition was subjected to the test fire for 11 min after failure under load had occurred, and was then sprayed on the fire exposed side with water from a garden hose nozzle. This treatment did not result in any breaks that would permit the passage of flame or gas in any considerable quantity. The test frame and partition were withdrawn from the furnace several minutes after the fire was stopped and further sprayed to quench fires continuing in the studs. Collapse of the remaining charred structure with the plaster facing occurred about 1 hr after the test had ended.

V. Summary of Tests

Reference is made to table 1 for a summary of the tests. The two partitions were substantially alike. The laths of lot 1 (test No. 120) were perforated with 42 holes 13/16 in. in diameter, each, and those of lot 2, with 48 holes of the same diameter. A more noteworthy difference apparently was the greater strength of the plaster used in the facings of test partition No. 123 then in No. 120.

The construction employed in test no. 120, that is, 2 by 4 in. yellow pine studs spaced 16 in. on centers, faced with gypsum lath, 48 by 16 by 3/8 in., and perforated with 42 holes of 13/16 in. diameter and 1/2 in. thickness of 1:2 sanded gypsum plaster of 750 lb/in.^{2} compression strength as 2 in. cubes, has a fire resistance rating of 50 min., combustible, as a load-bearing partition, and as a non-load-bearing partition, 1 hour, combustible.

The construction employed in test No. 123, like that of test No. 120 except for the six additional holes in the laths and plaster of double the strength of that used in test No. 120, achieved a fire resistance rating of 1 hour, combustible either as a load-bearing or non-load-bearing partition. The requirements for the hose stream test for the tests reported herein are considered to have been met in test No. 65, report No. T. G. 3619-10; F. R. 788, dated February 18, 1937.

This report is submitted for your information and is not released for publication in whole or part for general use in connection with sales promotion. It is allowable, however, to cite the ratings given above as based on tests conducted according to the specifications referred to under Section III. 1 of this report.

11465 (c) Sand.—The sand used in the plaster facings had been dredged from the Potomac River, washed, and screened to pass a No. 14 sieve.

(d) Plaster.—The plaster for each partition was delivered in a separate lot. The following data are from the report on physical tests of the two lots.

	Lot 1	Lot 2
Consistency	45	40
Time of Set	6 hrs.	12 hrs.
Tensile Strength	400 lb./in.^{2}	380 lb/in.^{2}

Both lots met the requirements of Federal Specification SS-P-401, Plaster; Gypsum.

Each bag bore the markings, "Gold Bond" and "Double fibered".

The finish coat of plaster was made from four parts putty to one part gaging plaster. The putty was made by soaking Washington Finish Hydrate in water for three or more days, after which it was gaged with calcined gaging plaster mixed in batches on the board.

2. Design

These partitions of the usual design for wood-stud load-bearing partitions had 2 by 4 in. scantlings for plates, studs and bridging between studs at mid-height. The allowable load on the partitions was 358 lb/in^2 of net area of studs, or 30,550 lb. on the 13 studs of each partition. The partitions were free to expand endwise.

3. Construction

(a) Framing.—The top and bottom plates were bolted to the test frame members with three 1/2 in. diameter bolts in each. The studs were spaced 16 in. on centers and toe nailed to the plates with not less than three 8d nails in each end. The bridging blocks, cut herringbone fashion, were nailed between the studs to form a fire stop at mid-height.

(b) Plaster base.—The gypsum lath boards were nailed to each stud bearing with four sharp-pointed, thin-headed nails 1 1/4 in. long by 13 1/2 gage wire with 5/16 in. diameter head—a total of 16 nails per board. The boards were spaced 1/4 in. apart along their edges and the end joints were staggered from course to course.

11466 (c) Grounds.—Perforated metal base beads were applied over the lath at 7 in. from the bottom and 12 in. from the top of the partitions. These formed screeds to give 1/2 in. thickness of plaster over the face of the lath.

(d) Plastering.—The plaster was applied in three coats. The first two coats were applied by the "double up" method. The second coat was applied as soon as the suction of the plaster base had removed enough water to permit the application of more plaster over the first coat. The plaster was mixed with sand in the proportions 1 part plaster to 2 parts sand by weight of the dry materials. The average strength of 2 in. cubes of the sanded plaster was 1220 and 1320 lb. per sq. in., respectively, when tested at 60 days.

The white finish was applied on the 8th day after the scratch and brown coats had been applied. The strength of 2 in. cubes was 490 lb. per sq. in.

(e) Trim.—The wooden base board and the strips serving as picture molds were applied just previous to the fire tests.

(f) Workmanship.—The workmanship was comparable with that found in local building practice.

(g) Illustrations.—The appearances of the partitions before, during, and after the tests are shown by figs. 1 to 5. Details of the construction, placement of thermocouples and the temperatures of the furnace and at points within the partition and on the unexposed surface are shown by fig. 6.

III. Methods of Testing

1. Specifications

The tests were conducted in accordance with the requirements of the Specifications for Fire Tests of Building Construction and Materials of the American Standards Association except that no partition was subjected to the fire and hose stream test, the adequacy of this type of construction to meet the requirements of this test having been shown by two previous tests.

2. Testing Equipment

The large wall testing equipment of the National Bureau of Standards was used for the tests. This comprises a gas-fired furnace with frames suitable, into which the walls are built to season for test. Each of the frames for these tests was equipped with four hydraulic jacks for applying load.

11467 The furnace is equipped with pyrometers to measure temperatures at nine points within the furnace chamber, at six points within the partition, and under nine asbestos pads distributed on the unexposed surface of each partition. Chromel-alumel thermocouples and portable type potentiometers were used for indicating temperatures in comparison with melting ice.

Deflections of the partitions during tests were observed by measuring from three wires stretched between the top and bottom members of the test frames, one opposite the vertical center line and one at 4 ft. each side of the center line.

3. Procedure

Each wall was built into a test frame and allowed to season 30 days before being subjected to test. The wall with its test frame was then drawn to form one side of the combustion chamber of the furnace and the load was applied before the start of the fire by pumping oil into the four jacks. The temperature was controlled to conform as nearly as possible to the standard reference curve.

The fires were continued for a short time after failure under load had occurred in order to determine when failure of non-bearing partitions might be expected.

IV. Results of Tests

1. Test No. 78

A fire endurance test of a fully-loaded wood-stud partition 16 in. long by 10 ft. 4 in. high by 5 1/2 in. thick faced on each side with 1/2 in. sanded gypsum plaster on perforated gypsum lath. The partition is shown in fig. 1. The test was conducted on September 10, 1936, the fire being continued 1 hr. 2 min.

(a) Furnace temperature.—The furnace fire gave an exposure as measured by the area under the curve of average temperatures, F, (fig. 6a) of 103 per cent of that derived from the area under the standard reference curve. The dashed lines above and below curve F show the maximum and minimum temperatures indicated by the thermocouples exposed to the furnace fire.

(b) Partition temperatures.—The average of the temperatures indicated by the three thermocouples between the lath and the studs on the fire exposed side of the partition, at 2 ft. from the top, is shown by curve 1, fig. 6a, and the maximum of the three by curve 1 max.

11468 The temperatures within the spaces between the studs at the same level are shown by curves 2 and 2 max.

The average of the surface temperatures measured under the nine asbestos pads on the unexposed surface, and the maximum of the nine, are shown by curves P and P max. of the same figure.

(c) Deflections.—The center of the partition deflected towards the fire about 1/4 in. during the first five minutes exposure to the fire, after which it returned, reaching its original position between 10 and 15 min. The deflection was subsequently away from the fire, at 45 min. was 1 1/2 in., and at 48 min., the time of failure under load, was about 2 1/2 in.

(d) Effects of test, fire exposed side.—The first break to appear in the plaster was at 5 1/2 min. when about 1/4 sq. ft. of white finish spalled off.

At 17 3/4 min. a bulge of plaster 3 ft. long was observed at the center of the panel. This bulge had cracked at 20 3/4 min. and the broken edge was standing out 3 1/2 in. from its original position. The break in the bulged central part of the panel had extended to the south end at 22 3/4 min.

At 23 1/3 min. about 10 sq. ft. of plaster fell from just to the north of the center of the panel. This was quickly followed by the falling of a strip 20 in. wide extending from the center to the south end. At 25 min. another area of plaster fell, bringing the total area fallen to 40 sq. ft.

Vigorous flaming of the paper facing of the gypsum lath followed the fall of plaster. At 28 min. the plaster had separated from the lath above the area from which the plaster had fallen and the lower edge stood 6 to 8 in. from the lath.

The fall of the first piece of lath to expose the wood studs occurred at 32 1/2 min. and 2 min. later a considerable area of lath fell, resulting in a large volume of flame from the exposed studs and paper facings on the lath. At 35 1/2 min. more plaster and lath fell from above the central part of the partition. At 42 1/2 min. about all of plaster and lath had fallen from the upper part of the partition, there remained, however, a strip across the bottom about 2 ft. high.

Failure under load occurred at 48 min. The pressure of oil in the jacks was reduced from 120 lb. per sq. in. to 25 lb. per sq. in. and the screw jacks were set to hold the loading beam in this position. The fire was continued in order to determine when the limiting temperature on the unexposed side of the partition would be reached. At 55 1/4 min. practically all of the plaster had fallen from the fire exposed side. The limiting temperature having been exceeded, the fire was stopped at 62 min.

(e) Effects of test, unexposed side.—The first crack appeared at 4 min. after the start of the test. It was a vertical crack along the first stud south of the center of the panel. At 5 min. a similar crack along the second stud north of the center line appeared and steam had begun to issue from the openings around thermocouple leads Nos. 10 to 15 (fig. 1) and along ends of the partition. At 9 min. the cracks noted above were closed.

A crack about 1 ft. long appeared in the upper south corner (fig. 1) at 13 min. and spalling of white finish along it had begun at 16 min. At 25 min. similar cracks appeared near the lower corners at both north and south ends. A vertical crack 7 ft. long just north of pad 3 was observed at 42 min.

The cracks noted at 4 and 5 min. were observed to be opening again very slightly at 45 min.

Failure under load at 48 min. was accompanied by the opening of a crack between pads 4 and 7 (fig. 1).

An irregular horizontal crack 6 ft. long opened below pads 5 and 6 just after failure under load. Several other cracks in the plaster opened within the period 48 to 61 1/4 min. at which time the limiting rise of temperature under pad 5 had been reached and the photograph (fig. 2) was made.

(f) Failure.—Failure of the partition in this test was by inability to support the full working load beyond 48 min.

The limit of endurance as a surface finish over wood framing, a temperature rise of 325°F (181°C), was reached at 31 3/4 min. in locations not affected by the falling of plaster, and the limiting rise of the same amount on the unexposed surface under pad 5 was reached at 61 min. The thickness of the plaster on the unexposed side at pad 5 was 1/2 in. This was also the average thickness as measured at the nine pads.

(g) Condition after test.—All the studs except those at the ends were burnt in two and collapse of the partition was imminent at the time of removal from the furnace. The gypsum lath had been calcined for almost its entire area on the unexposed side, and much of the plaster likewise had been calcined. This construction could not be depended upon as a barrier against the sweep of fire beyond its load endurance limit, or beyond 1 hr. when used as a non-bearing partition. The plaster facing was held to the lath by keys in the perforations.

11470 2. Test No. 89.

A fire endurance test of a fully loaded wood stud partition 16 ft. long by 10 ft. high by 5 1/2 in. thick faced on each side with 1/2 in. sanded gypsum plaster on perforated gypsum lath. The partition, ready for test, is shown in fig. 4. The test was conducted on November 30, 1936, the fire being continued 1 hr. 11 1/2 min.

(a) Furnace temperature.—The fire exposure, by curve F, fig. 6, was 101 percent of that determined from the area under the standard reference curve. The dashed lines above and below curve F show the maximum and minimum temperature measured in the furnace during the test.

(b) Partition temperatures.—The average of the temperature indicated by the three thermocouples between the lath and the studs on the fire exposed side at 2 ft. from the top, is shown by curve 1, fig. 6b, and the maximum of the three by curve 1 max. The temperatures within the spaces between the studs at the same level are shown by curves 2 and 2 max.

The average of the surface temperatures measured under the nine asbestos pads on the unexposed surface, and the maximum of the nine, are shown by curves P and P max. of the same figure.

(c) Deflections.—The partition deflected towards the fire at its center 1/5 in. during the first 5 min. of the test and at 15 min. had returned to its original position, after which no movement was recorded before 30 min., at which time an outward movement of 1/10 in. was observed. At 55 min. the deflection at the center had reached one inch and was away from the fire.

(d) Effects of test, fire exposed side.—At 9 min. after the start of the fire three small horizontal ridges 6 to 10 in. long in the white finish were seen over joints between courses of gypsum lath.

At 18 min. the base board was charred through and ready to fall away. A bulge in the surface of the plaster at mid-height near the north end of the panel was observed at 27 min. and at 28 min. a vertical crack 5 ft. long was seen at 2 ft. south of the center. The plaster was soon standing out about 3/4 in. to 1 in. along this crack. At 30 1/2 min. a horizontal crack 1 ft. long branched off from the middle of the vertical crack and at 32 min. the lower end of the vertical crack branched into two cracks.

11471 At 34 min. several cracks were to be seen and flames were burning at four of them. The plaster at this time had bulged out 3 to 3 1/2 in. along the first vertical crack.

About two-thirds of a square yard of plaster fell from near the center of the panel at 38 1/2 min. and a half min. later almost a square yard of plaster and a half square yard of lath fell, exposing the studs. At 44 min. the plaster south of the first observed vertical crack and below the horizontal crack noted at 30 1/2 min, had fallen to expose the studs. Flames filled the south half of the furnace chamber. The total area of plaster fallen up to this time was about 4 1/2 sq. yd.

At 54 1/2 min. another small area of plaster fell from the upper south end of the panel.

The partition failed to support the full working load after 59 1/2 min. The load was relieved and the fire continued in order to determine the time at which the limiting temperature would be attained under the asbestos pads on the unexposed surface.

The fire was stopped at 1 hr. 11 1/2 min.

(e) Effects of test, unexposed side.—At 5 min. after the start of the test steam was issuing from the top and ends of the partition and around the thermocouple leads Nos. 10 to 15 (fig. 5).

Four cracks, nearly all vertical, were observed at 6 min. and at 10 min. a horizontal crack at 1 1/2 ft. below mid-height and a diagonal crack 1 1/2 ft. above the bottom were seen at the south end of the panel, also similar cracks at the north end. Another vertical crack about 2 1/2 ft. long south of pad 4 appeared at 12 min.

At 30 min. most all of the surface cracks were closed and little steam was seen. At 42 min. small round spots began to appear on the surface of the wall opposite holes in lath. At 57 min. a bulge at the south quarter length of the panel was growing perceptibly. More cracks developed as the partition deflected. Several cracks were developed after load failure before the limiting temperature had been reached.

(f) Failure.—Failure in this test, as in test No. 78 was by inability of the partition longer to support the test load. This occurred at 59 1/2 min.

The limit of endurance as a surface finish over wood framing, a temperature rise of 325°F (181°C) at one point, was reached at 31 min. and the limiting rise of the same amount on the unexposed side under pad 7 was reached at 65 min. The thickness of plaster at the 9 pads 11472 on the unexposed surface ranged from 1/2 to 5/8 in., and averaged 9/16 in.

(g) Condition after test.—The studs were nearly all found to be burnt in two after the fire had been quenched about 18 min. after failure had occurred. The board and plaster on the unexposed side remained in place until the fire was quenched, there was, however, little strength in the plaster at the time the fire was stopped.

V. Summary and Discussion

Tests on two wood framed partitions faced with sanded gypsum lath for fire endurance while subjected to full working load gave different results with different sizes of holes through the lath. The plaster facing exposed to the fire was retained longer with the larger holes; and, likewise, the fire endurance limit was increased from 48 min. to 59 1/2 min.

Two fire and hose stream tests made on partitions of similar construction showed that this type of construction has a reserve above that required to resist erosion of the hose stream after 30 min. exposure to the test fire, therefore, no hose stream test was required.

The fire resistance rating of the load-bearing partition of 2 in. by 4 in. yellow pine studs with plates of the same material top and bottom and fire-stopped at mid-height, when faced with 1/2 in. of 1:2 sanded gypsum plaster applied over 3/8 in. thick gypsum lath perforated with 10 holes of 5/8 in. diameter per sq. ft., is 45 min.

The fire resistance rating of the partition of the same construction but having 3/8 in. thick gypsum lath perforated with 10 holes of 7/8 in. diameter per sq. ft., is 1 hour.

This report is submitted for your information and is not released for publication in whole or part nor for general use in connection with sales promotion. It is allowable, however, to cite the ratings given above as based on tests conducted according to the specifications referred to under Section III-1 of this report.

Respectfully submitted,

UNITED STATES GYPSUM COMPANY

PURSUANT TO RULE 33 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND ORDER OF COURT DATED APRIL 5, 1943

11480 Interrogatory No. 22—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from September 1, 1925 to April 1, 1926, between your representatives and representatives of Beaver Products Company, Inc., and The American Gypsum Company, or of either of said companies, and the names of all of such representatives present at each of such conferences or meetings, in any way relating to (1) settlement of pending litigation between you and Beaver or American, (2) the issuance of a license to Beaver or American or to any other company by you [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—So far as we have definite information there were two meetings between Sewell L. Avery, President of the United States Gypsum Company and Augustus S. Blagden, President of Beaver Products, Inc., one in December, 1925, and the other in February, 1926, relating to the possibility of a settlement of litigation then existing between United States Gypsum Company and Beaver Products, Inc. and to the possibility of the issuance of a license by United States Gypsum Company to Beaver Products, Inc. The former meeting occurred in Chicago, Illinois, and the latter in New York, N. Y.

Interrogatory No. 23—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from April 1, 1926 to May 1, 1927 between your representatives and representatives of any other companies manufacturing gypsum board at that time or any time thereafter, in any way relating to the issuance of licenses by you under any patent owned by you. State the names of all companies represented at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of the representatives of each of said companies, the names of all other individuals present at each of said conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—As presently advised, there were the following meetings:

(a) May 20, 1926; Chicago, Illinois. Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, attended for a time a meeting of several representatives of other companies interested in the gypsum board business. The names of the representatives and their companies are not definitely known.

(b) June—July, 1926; Chicago, Illinois. Numerous meetings were held between Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and Augustus S. Blagden, President of Beaver Products, Inc. and/or their respective attorneys, John E. MacLeish and J. McMitchell. The dates of such meetings were: June 15, June 16, June 17, June 21, July 7, July 8, July 9, July 10, July 22, July 23, July 24, and July 29, 1926.

(c) June 18, 1926; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, Frank J. Griswold, Vice-President of American Gypsum

Company and M. A. Reeb, President of Niagara Gypsum Company.

(d) August—September, 1926; Chicago, Illinois. Several meetings were held between Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and W. E. Shearer, President of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company and/or their respective attorneys, John E. MacLeish and Messrs. Carnahan and Fricke. The dates of such meetings were August 3, August 10, August 24, August 31, and September 17, 1926.

(e) September 13, 1926; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, John E. MacLeish, its attorney, J. H. McCrady, President, Frank J. Griswold, Vice-President and C. F. Miller, director, of American Gypsum Company.

(f) March 3, 4 and 5, 1927; Chicago, Illinois. Meetings were held between Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, and W. P. Fuller, President of Atlantic Gypsum Products, Inc. and/or their respective attorneys, John E. MacLesh and H. M. Channing.

11481 (g) March 22, 1927; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and Samuel M. Gloyd, representing Texas Cement Plaster Company.

Interrogatory No. 32—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928, to June 1, 1929, between your representatives and representatives of any and all other gypsum companies, in any way relating to (1) the settlement of any patent litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses by you under patents owned by you and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—As presently advised, there were the following meetings:

(a) February 29, 1928; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum

Company, George M. Brown, President of Certain-teed Products Corporation and Augustus S. Blagden, President Beaver Products, Inc., the assets of which latter company had just been purchased by Certain-teed.

(b) Shortly prior to November 20, 1928; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and John A. Kling, President of American Gypsum Company.

(c) April 11, 1929, Cleveland, Ohio; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and John A. Kling, President of American Gypsum Company.

(d) May 9, 1929; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, John A. Kling, President of American Gypsum Company and their respective attorneys, John E. MacLeish and John H. Watson.

(e) May 21, 22 and 23, 1929; Chicago, Illinois. Meetings were held at which some or all of the following persons attended from time to time: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, and John E. MacLeish, attorney; W. P. Fuller, President of Atlantic Gypsum Products, Inc., and H. M. Channing, attorney; George M. Brown, President, and Audenreid Whittemore, Vice-President of Certain-teed Products Corporation; Frederick G. Ebsary, President of Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc., and Harlan W. Rippey, attorney; Melvin H. Baker, President of National Gypsum Company, and Elmer E. Finck, attorney; M. A. Reeb, President of Niagara Gypsum Company; Eugene Holland, President of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, and F. E. Britton, attorney.

(f) Although we have no definite record as to dates, F. J. Griswold, Vice-President of American Gypsum Company called on Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company at Mr. Avery's office on a few occasions during this period.

(g) Although we have no definite record as to dates, Eugene Holland, President of, and later Co-Receiver for, Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, called on Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company at Mr. Avery's office on a few occasions during this period.

Interrogatory No. 34—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between your representatives and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, or any other company, in any way relating to (1) any allegation, statement, or claim, that the use of starch in the foam process infringed or would infringe the Hite or Haggerty patents, (2) the acquisition by you of the Hite or Haggerty patents. State by whom these conferences or meetings on each occasion were attended on your behalf and on behalf of Universal, or any other company, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

11482 Answer—As presently advised, there were the following meetings relating to claims that United States Gypsum Company infringed the Haggerty and Hite patents in its manufacture of gypsum board or the aquisition by United States Gypsum Company of the Hite and Haggerty patents:

(a) July, 1929; Chicago, Illinois; present: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company and Eugene Holland, co-receiver of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company.

(b) July 25, 1929; Chicago, Illinois; a meeting was held at which some or all of the following attended: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, and its attorney, John E. MacLeish; W. P. Fuller, President of Atlantic Gypsum Products, Inc., and its attorney, H. M. Channing; C. O. Brown, Vice-President of Certain-teed Products Corporation; Frederick G. Ebsary, President, and/or George N. Lenci, Vice-President of Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc., and/or its attorney, Harlan W. Rippey; Melvin H. Baker, President of National Gypsum Company and its attorney, Elmer E. Finck; M. E. Reeb, President of Niagara Gypsum Company; and Eugene Holland, co-receiver of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company.

(c) August 6, 1929; Chicago, Illinois. A meeting was held at which some or all of the following attended: Sewell L. Avery, President of United States Gypsum Company, and its attorney, John E. MacLeish; W. P. Fuller, President of Atlantic Gypsum Products, Inc., and its attorney, H. M. Channing; C. O. Brown, Vice-President of Certain-teed Products Corporation; Frederick G. Ebsary, President, and/or George N. Lenci, Vice-President of Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc., and/or its attorney, Harlan W. Rippey; Melvin H. Baker, President of National Gypsum Company and its attorney, Elmer E. Finck; M. E. Reeb, President of Niagara Gypsum Company; and Eugene Holland, co-receiver of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company.

(d) August—November, 1929; Chicago, Illinois. Meetings were held between John E. MacLeish, attorney for United States Gypsum Company and L. W. Fricke and/or F. E. Britton, attorneys for Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, on the following dates: August 19, August 20, September 4, September 6, September 16, September 17, September 18, September 24, September 26, September 27, September 30, October 3, October 10, October 14, October 15, October 17, October 21, October 22, October 25, October 26, October 29, November 4 and November 5, 1929. A few of the foregoing meetings were attended by Sewell L. Avery, President of the United States Gypsum Company and Eugene Holland, co-receiver of Universal Gypsum & Lime Company. The meetings of August 20, August 30 and October 3, 1929, were attended by Melvin H. Baker, President of National Gypsum Company and its attorney, Elmer E. Finck.

Interrogatory No. 35—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between your representatives and representatives of the Texas Cement Plaster Company at which you offered to license Texas under the Hite and Haggerty and foam process patents, the names of all officials and representatives of either company that were present at such conferences or meetings [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at such conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—As presently advised, there were meetings between Oliver M. Knode, President of United States Gypsum Company and Samuel M. Gloyd of Texas Cement Plaster Company on January 13 and 14, . 37, at which a license to manufacture and sell gypsum board under the Haggerty patent and patents covering cellular gypsum board and other patents was offered by United States Gypsum Company to Texas Cement Plaster Company.

11483 Interrogatory No. 39—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between you and your licensees and the names of all individuals who attended such meetings at which the prices and terms and conditions of sale for gypsum board prescribed by you in the various bulletins issued by you were discussed or at which complaints of alleged violations by licensees of said bulletin prices and terms and conditions of sale were discussed.

Answer—As presently advised, licensee meetings were held on or about the following dates in the following places and were attended by the following representatives of United States Gypsum Company:

Date	Place	Representatives of U. S. Gypsum Company
March 10, 1931	Chicago, Ill	Sewell L. Avery, C. F. Henning, and John E. Mac Leish, attorney.

NATIONAL GYPSUM COMPANY

PURSUANT TO RULE 33 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND ORDER OF COURT DATED APRIL 5, 1943

11486 Interrogatory No. 28—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929, between representatives of U.S.G. and representatives of any and all other gypsum companies, in any way relating to (1) the settlement of any patent litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained obection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—National Gypsum Company has no reasonably acceptable records from which it can supply the dates and places of meetings and the names of persons present at conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to July 1, 1929, between the representatives of the United States Gypsum Company and the representatives of any and all other gypsum companies in any way relating to (1) the settlement of any patent litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under patents owned by U.S.G.; except that meetings of the representatives of various gypsum companies took place in Chicago, Illinois, in May, 1929. The actual dates and places of such conferences or meetings cannot be given with any reasonable accuracy from any available record. Such conferences or meetings were usually attended by Melvin H. Baker, as representative of National Gypsum Company.

As now advised the present employees of National competent to speak state that they cannot with reasonable accuracy name the representative or representatives of any and all other gypsum companies present at each of such conferences or meetings.

Interrogatory No. 29—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929 between representatives of any and all gypsum companies, relating to (1) the settlement of any litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—Same as No. 28.

Interrogatory No. 31—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between representatives of U.S.G. and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, or any other company, in any way relating to (1) any allegation, statement, or claim, that the use of starch in the foam process infringed or would infringe
11485 the Hite or Haggerty patents, (2) the acquisition by U.S.G. of the Hite or Haggerty patents. State by whom these conferences or meetings on each occasion were attended on your behalf and on behalf of Universal and U.S.G. or any other company, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—As presently advised National Gypsum Company or any one of its present employees competent to speak has no reasonably accurate record or recollection with respect to the information requested in Interrogatory No. 31.

Interrogatory No. 37—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between U.S.G. and its licensees and the names of all individuals who attended such meetings at which the prices and terms and conditions of sale for gypsum board prescribed by U.S.G. in the various bulletins issued by U.S.G. were discussed or at which complaints of alleged violations by licensees of said bulletin prices and terms and conditions of sale were discussed.

Answer—As presently advised licensee meetings were held from time to time after the signing of the license agreement, but Natonal Gypsum Company has no definite information as to the individuals who attended such meetings nor as to the dates and places of such meetings. The recollection of present employees competent to speak is that some or all of such meetings were attended by M. H. Baker or R. F. Burley, representing National Gypsum Company; C. F. Henning, W. R. Keady, John MacLeish, Attorney, F. M. Miller, H. F. Sadler or E. W. Carey, representing United States Gypsum Company; C. O. Brown or Warren Henley, representing Certain-teed Products Company; F. G. Ebsary or George Lenci, representing Ebsary Gypsum Company; A. R. Black, representing American Gypsum Company; W. P. Fuller or L. I. Neale, representing Atlantic Gypsum Products Company; S. J. Kelly, representing Kelly Plasterboard Company, and Eugene Holland, representing Universal Gypsum & Lime Company.

PURSUANT TO RULE 33 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND ORDER OF COURT DATED APRIL 5, 1943

11488 Interrogatory No. 24—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from September 1, 1925 to May 1, 1927 between your representatives and representatives of any other companies manufacturing gypsum board at that time or any time thereafter, in any way relating to the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under any patent owned by U.S.G. State the names of all companies represented at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of the representatives of each of said companies, the names of all other individuals present at each of said conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—We are unable to supply the answer to this interrogatory from any company record or the memory of any present employee competent to speak.

Interrogatory No. 33—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929, between representatives of U.S.G. and representatives of any and all other gypsum companies, in any way relating to (1) the settlement of any patent litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—In so far as we have been able to ascertain there were the following meetings:

1. On or about February 28, 1928 there was a meeting which was attended by Mr. G. M. Brown on behalf of Certain-teed Products Corporation. We are unable to state where the meeting was held or what other companies were represented other than that United States Gypsum Company was represented by some person whose name we are unable to supply.

2. On or about May 22, 1929 there was a meeting at Chicago, Illinois at which Certain-teed Products Corporation was represented by Mr. George M. Brown and Mr. Audenried Whittemore. United States Gypsum Company was represented by Mr. Sewell L. Avery and Mr. John E. McLeish. We are unable to state the names of anyone else who was present.

Interrogatory No. 34—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929 between representatives of any and all gypsum companies, relating to (1) the settlement of any litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—Other than as stated in the answer to interrogatory No. 33 we are unable to supply any information in answer to this interrogatory.

Interrogatory No. 36—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between representatives of U.S.G. and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, or any other company, in any way relating to (1) any allegation, statement, or claim, that the use of starch in the foam process infringed or would infringe the Hite or Haggerty patents, (2) the acquisition by U.S.G. of the Hite or Haggerty patents. State by whom these conferences or meetings on each occasion were attended on your behalf and on behalf of Universal and U.S.G. or any other company, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

11489 Answer—So far as we are able presently to state the following meetings took place:

1. July 26, 1929 at Chicago, Illinois. Present: Mr. C. O. Brown of Certain-teed Products Corporation, Mr. Sewell L. Avery of United States Gypsum Company. There were also present representatives of National Gypsum Company, Atlantic Gypsum Company, Ebsary Gypsum Company and their attorneys but we are unable to supply the names of such representatives and attorneys.

2. August 6, 1929 at Chicago, Illinois. Present: Mr. C. O. Brown of Certain-teed Products Corporation. We are unable to state what other persons were present.

Interrogatory No. 42—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between U.S.G. and its licensees and the names of all individuals who attended such meetings at which the prices and terms and conditions of sale for gypsum board prescribed by U.S.G. in the various bulletins issued by U.S.G. were discussed or at which complaints of alleged violations by licensees of said bulletin prices and terms and conditions of sale were discussed.

Answer—So far as we are able presently to state the following meetings took place at which the persons listed below were present:

1. On May 23, 1934 at Chicago, Illinois. Present: Warren Henley and H. H. Van Hagan of Certain-teed Products Corporation; C. F. Henning of United States Gypsum Company.

2. On December 20, 1934 at Chicago, Illinois. Present: H. H. Van Hagan of Certain-teed Products Corporation; C. F. Henning of United States Gypsum Company.

3. On June 10, 1936 at New York, New York. Present: C. O. Brown of Certain-teed Products Corporation; C. F. Henning of United States Gypsum Company.

4. On September 10, 1936 at New York, New York. Other than as stated above we are unable to state who was present at the foregoing meetings.

PURSUANT TO RULE 33 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND ORDER OF COURT DATED APRIL 5, 1943

11491 Interrogatory No. 22—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from September 1, 1925 to May 1, 1927 between your representatives and representatives of any other companies manufacturing gypsum board at that time or any time thereafter, in any way relating to the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under any patent owned by U.S.G. State the names of all companies represented at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of the representatives of each of said companies, the names of all other individuals present at each of said conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—We did not make gypsum board at any time between September 1, 1925, and May 1, 1927, and we had no meetings with other companies relating to the issuance of any license by U.S.G. under any patent.

Interrogatory No. 27—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929, between representatives of U.S.G. and representatives of any and all other gypsum companies, in any way relating to (1) the settlement of any patent litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses by U.S.G. under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—We have no knowledge, recollection or record of any meetings between January 1, 1928, and June 1, 1929, except a meeting of May 21st—23rd, 1929, which was held at Chicago, Illinois, when the original license agreement was issued by U.S.G. to Ebsary. We had no occasion to meet with U.S.G. or other companies to discuss settlement of litigation, as we did not make any closed edge board until after the issuance of a license by U.S.G. We had no suits pending against us in relation to any patents.

We have no record of those present at the May 1929 meeting, but believe that all of the following companies were represented by one or more of their executives, and in some cases also by counsel:

U.S.G.	Niagara	Certain-teed
National	Kelley	Universal
Atlantic	Ebsary	American

Ebsary was represented at said meeting by Frederick G. Ebsary and George N. Lenci and possibly by Harlan W. Rippey.

Interrogatory No. 28—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings held during the period from January 1, 1928 to June 1, 1929 between representatives of any and all gypsum companies, relating to (1) the settlement of any litigation; (2) the issuance of licenses under patents owned by U.S.G. and state the names of all representatives of all companies who were present at each of said conferences or meetings, the names of all companies who were represented at each of such conferences or meetings [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—Same as No. 27 above.

Interrogatory No. 30—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between representatives of U.S.G. and the Universal Gypsum & Lime Company, or any other company, in any way relating to (1) any allegation, statement, or claim, that the use of starch in the foam process infringed or would infringe the Hite or Haggerty patents, (2) the acquisition by U.S.G. of the Hite or Haggerty patents. State by whom these conferences or meetings on each occasion were attended on your behalf and on behalf
11492. of Universal and U.S.G. or any other company, [and state the substance of what was said by each person present at said conferences or meetings.] [Court sustained objection to matters enclosed in brackets.]

Answer—To the best of our present information and belief, there was a meeting at Chicago in or about August or September 1929 in relation to the Hite and/or Haggerty patents whcih Frederick G. Ebsary attended. At such meeting we believe U.S.G. was represented by Sewell L. Avery, National by Melvin H. Baker, Universal by Eugene Holland, and Certain-teed by C. O. Brown. We have no record of the meeting or the date thereof or of those present. There may have been additional companies represented at this meeting.

Interrogatory No. 37—State the dates and places of all conferences or meetings between U.S.G. and its licensees and the names of all individuals who attended such meetings at which the prices and terms and conditions of sale for gypsum board prescribed by U.S.G. in the various bulletins issued by U.S.G. were discussed or at which complaints of alleged violations by licensees of said bulletin prices and terms and conditions of sale were discussed.

Answer—The dates and places of all conferences or meetings between U.S.G. and its licensees referred to in this interrogatory of which we have knowledge, and the names of the individuals who attended such meetings were as follows:

Partition Tile Footage	21,777,000	19,767,000	G 10.2%

Gross sales for the year 1926 were $33,540,389 as compared with $32,373,353 for the year 1925 or an increase of 3.6%; also 73.4% greater than the average of the past seven years.

Sales Expense increased 23.2% over the twelve months of 1925 as compared with the Gross Sales increase of 3.6% and the Total Tonnage increase of 5.3%.

The Advertising Expense $1,068,820, represents an increase of 40.0% over the 1925 expenditure.

The 1926 Sales Expense plus the Advertising Expense equals $3,562,226, an increase of 27.8% over 1925.

Purchased lime shipments for year 1926 were 5561 tons as compared with 6628 tons for year 1926 and represents a decrease of 16.1%.

11495 Rock—The rock tonnage shows a gain of 1% in volume for 1926 as compared with previous year.

This is a decline over the percentage increase for the 9 months, which is due to the difficulties encountered in shipping New Brighton rock to the Lehigh Portland Cement Company which will be overcome during the year.

Our propaganda is slowly taking effect and there is no doubt but we will slowly, but gradually increase our rock tonnage from New Brighton.

Prices show a 1% increase, this due to the transfer of Oakfield business to New Brighton. Prices in general are holding firm.

Stucco—Stucco shows an increase of 5% for the year as compared with the previous year, with price decline of 6%. This price decline is due to meeting competitive quotations and increasing our tonnage.

Stucco Specialties show an increase of 16% for the year as compared with the previous year, with price decline of 1%.

We are meeting German competition in Cuba, Boston and Philadelphia, which will mean lower prices in these markets. We are also forced to meet the lower prices from other New York manufacturers, on account of our aggressiveness and sales.

Neat Wall Plaster—Cement Plaster shows an increase of 3% over the year as compared with the previous year, and a price decline of 3%. The price decline is identical with the showing for the nine months, but the low prices due to the competitive conditions in the Southwest on account of protected tonnage have not shown themselves in the price average.

Although the Southwest and Southeast condition has been somewhat rectified, the prices have declined 12½% which will hold.

We are also facing serious price declines in the larger eastern markets on account of competitive aggression. In the balance of the territories, prices are stable and look for but little declines for the immediate future.

Sanded Wall Plaster—Shows a decrease in tonnage of 14% for the year, as compared with the previous year, with price increase of 1%. Tonnage is holding the same as for the previous quarters with a better outlook on sanded for the coming year.

Sheetrock—Sheetrock shows a decrease of 4% and a price decline of 1% as compared with the previous year. The principal competitive activity is due to the agression of the National Gypsum Company, who are now starting sales operations in the central territory preparatory to opening their Northern Michigan Mill.

Certainteed competition is severe, due to the fact that they have made a price decline of 10% in all markets on both plaster wallboard and plaster board. We have not as yet met this price decline.

The larger markets in the east are being flooded by seconds which are presumably firsts and are changing $30.00 markets to $20.00 markets. We are meeting this condition where necessary to hold our establishment, but thereby suffering a loss in sales valuation.

The other competitors manufacturing Plaster Board are starting strenuous advertising campaigns and it has been necessary to increase the sales organization and advertising effort, to counteract these campaigns.

Sterling Board—Sterling board for the year shows 10,400,000 square feet with a sales valuation of $206,228.00. No sales made in 1925. We are making new gains in Sterling establishment, especially on the Pacific Coast where sales are now running 2,000,000 feet per month.

Gyp-Lap—Gyp-Lap sales for the year are 8,954,000 feet as compared with 5,183,000 feet for previous year, showing 73% increase. Gyp-Lap sales are still a disappointment and we believe that we have finally discovered the sales resistance, which is thickness, weight and dimensions of board, and we are now preparing to ship boards of various dimensions to determine the most practical type of board.

This material has not shown any complaints and has shown a saving wherever used.

11497 Total Board Footage—Total board footage shows a gain of 12% for the year with a gain in sales valuation of 3%.

Total Footage for 1925	455,690,000
Total Footage for 1926	509,018,000
Sales Valuation 1925	$ 12,370,078
Sales Valuation 1926	12,711,320

The above figures show conclusively that Sterling and Rocklath sales have increased sales valuation, with a corresponding increase in gross profits over the shrinkage in Sheetrock sales valuation and gross profits.

The future of the board business from a footage and profit depends entirely upon our increase in Rocklath, Sterling and Gyp-Lap, to overcome any shrinkages in Sheetrock valuation and footage.

Partition Tile—Shows an increase of 21% with a price decline of 11%, due to the fact that there are more competitive tile manufacturers aggressively selling and it has become necessary to meet price conditions to increase volume. Tile prices are comparatively firm at the present time and do not look for any local price changes.

Hydrated Finishing Lime—Shows a tonnage increase of 10% and price decline of 4% as compared with the previous year. Prices on finish are becoming more unstable and look for further reduction for the coming year, due to the fact that we are now meeting all competitive prices on account of increased capacity at Genoa.

We are also taking on additional jobbing business at 10% to 12% price reduction.

Masons Hydrated Lime—Shows a decrease in price of 15% as compared with the previous year. The market prices on this commodity were demoralized throughout the year, but are stabilized again at about 10% less than last year's prices.

Textone—Shows an increase in volume of 36% as compared with previous year's sales being 2,414,200 pounds as compared with 1,771,000 pounds.

Textone Net Sales Valuation—1925	$340,586
Textone Net Sales Valuation—1926	437,080
Gain 28%

11498 Oriental Stucco (Finish and Base)—Sales for the year are 17,907 tons as compared with 10,673 tons for the same period of the previous year. Oriental Stucco has been shipped to every state in the Union and this commodity has now earned its place among exterior stuccoes and we look for very healthy tonnage gains for the coming year. It would be necessary to meet prices in larger cities and to meet the competition of locally manufactured stuccoes to increase our tonnage.

Oriental Sales Valuation—1925.....	$290,746
Oriental Sales Valuation—1926.....	489,746

Plastint—Sales for the year average 3830 tons, with no sales for the previous year.

We have increased dealer establishment and look for a healthy increase for 1927.

This commodity has changed so as to make it possible to both sand float and texture the material and our colors have been intensified, as we have discovered that the previous colors did not suit the popular taste on account of being in pastel shades only.

Pyrocell and Thermofill—Pyrocell sales for 1926 show 2469 tons—Thermofill 1930 tons. We are increasing our sales organization and manufacturing facilities for Thermofill, which will give us a production which should show greater volume for 1927.

General—Our advertising propaganda is showing remarkable results and the work for the month of January enlisting our dealers to support our National Campaign by newspaper advertising has resulted in securing newspaper campaigns from 483 dealers, equivalent to 187 full pages of advertising, using our cut and copy service. 1684 advertising portfolios have been sent to 1684 dealers and this will undoubtedly minimize the effect of competitive advertising campaigns and give the dealers a greater appropriation of advertising propaganda.

The sales force recommended in last report, to sell materials to the job is now working and promises good results. The increase in Rocklath in the larger cities can largely be contributed to the work of these men and as the season opens up, similar returns should be made on our other specialties.

From present indications, business should hold up for the first six months with continuous decline in prices, proportional to our sales aggression.

C. F. HENNING,
Vice-Pres. in charge of Sales

Gross sales for the first three months 1927 were $7,472,640 as compared with $7,019,639 same period last year or an increase of 6.4%, also 65.1% greater than the average for the first quarter of the previous seven years.

Sales expense increased 20% over first quarter 1926 as compared with a gross sales increase of 6.4% and Total Tonnage increase of 6.6%.

The Advertising Expense $256,774 represents an increase of 19.9% over three months of 1926.

The combined Sales and Advertising Expense, $993,030 for first quarter 1927 is 20% over 1926 expenditure, same period.

Purchased lime shipments for three months 1927 were 1224 tons as compared with 1531 last year or a decrease of 20%.

11500 Rock—The rock tonnage shows a 2% increase in volume for the first quarter, of 1927, as compared with the previous year. We are successfully overcoming the objections to New Brighton rock and with the further decrease in price, have been able to contract with larger users for the year.

Prices show a 5% decrease. This due to our voluntary decrease in price on New Brighton rock and also to price cuts by Certainteed in the Southwest and Grand Rapids areas, and new independent companies now offering crushed rock.

Stucco—Stucco shows a 31% decrease for the quarter, as compared with the same quarter of previous year, with a price increase of 2%. Certainteed at Grand Rapids—National at Oakfield, are making a drive for stucco at lower prices.

Stucco specialties show an increase of 7% for the quarter as compared with the quarter of the previous year, with a price decline of $3.00.

Neat Wall Plaster—Cement plaster shows an increase of 6% for the quarter as compared with the quarter for previous year, with a price decline of 2%. Competition is aggressive in all territories and the smaller companies are offering inducements on large jobs and larger companies are offering large dealers and users price inducements.

Sanded Wall Plaster—Shows an increase in tonnage of 2% for the quarter, as compared with same quarter previous year, with a price increase of 5%.

Plaster Board—Shows an increase in volume of 57% with a price reduction of 4%. The campaign on Rocklath is showing consistent increases. The total increase for the quarter being 11,491,000 square feet. Competition is meeting our Rocklath Campaign with cut down wallboard at lower prices.

Sheetrock and Sterling—Sheetrock and Sterling show a decrease of 5%, with a price decline of 2½% as compared with the same quarter previous year. We are still confronted with the problem of the National Company selling mixed cars of firsts and seconds averaging $25.00 for their board and also disastrous Certainteed competition, offering board at any price to get the initial order.

With the use of the folded edge, Beaver and Universal have increased sales and advertising aggression, and lower prices on lath and plaster are also restricting Sheetrock sales. The problem now is to hold the present rate of sales and we are confronted with both a decrease in price and volume.

GypLap—GypLap sales for the quarter-1,434,000
11501 feet as compared with 2,033,000 feet for the same quarter previous year, showing a 30% decrease.

Gyplap is a disappointment, but believe that a proper field study of price and dimensions should make this product more salable.

Total Board Footage—Total board footage of all kinds shows a gain of 13.6% for the quarter with a gain in sales valuation of 7%.

Total Footage three months 1926—108,604,000 feet.
Total Footage three months 1927—123,409,000 feet.

Net Sales Valuation three months 1926—$2,827,658.00.
Net Sales Valuation three months 1927—$3,018,320.00.

Although total board sales are greater than last year with greater sales valuation, the result in profits will not be proportional because losses in Sheetrock at $30.00 are substituted by sales in Rocklath at $15.00.

Partition Tile—Shows an increase of 21%, with a price decline of 25%.

The increased activity of competitive tile manufacturers is causing tile to be sold at an extremely low level and with the large over production of tile, there is little hope of price advances, although prices at the present time are comparatively firm.

Practically every factor in the plaster business is now producing tile and in addition, a number of small independent companies are also engaged exclusively in tile production.

Hydrated Finishing Lime—Shows a tonnage increase of 4½% and price decline of 1.3% as compared with same quarter previous year.

Prices on Finish Hydrate are comparatively stable, but Masons Hydrate prices are still demoralized.

Textone—Textone shows an increase in volume of 60% as compared with the same quarter previous year, sales being 815,097 pounds as compared with 510,304 pounds.

Textone net sales valuation three months 1926—$ 96,554.00.
Textone net sales valuation three months 1927—$143,835.00.

Showing a gain of 49%.

Oriental Stucco Finish and Base—Sales for first quarter 2266 tons as compared with 2608 tons same period 1926. The decrease in tonnage is satisfactory, due to the extremely rainy weather and there is no doubt but 11502 what Oriental should show rapidly increasing sales.

Oriental sales valuation three months 1926—$75,971.00.
Oriental sales valuation three months 1927—$63,614.00.

Loss—16%.

Plastint—Sales for three month 1927—793 tons, as compared with 351 tons three months 1926—a gain of 126%.

Pyrocell and Thermofill

Pyrocell for three months 1926—290 tons.
Pyrocell for three months 1927—290 tons.

Thermofill sales three months 1926—129 tons; three months 1927—563 tons.

We find a gradually limiting field for the sale of Pyrocell, due to the fact that wet mixtures cause difficulties under humidity conditions.

Our experience with Thermofill make us realize in this commodity a very valuable addition to our sales line and the tonnage should increase with its more general introduction and use.

General—The advertising campaign with Sheetrock dealers made a remarkable showing by securing 1856 dealers to co-operate with newspaper advertising, resulting in securing 681½ full pages of advertising, using our cut and copy service, equivalent to full pages or 1,546,834 lines.

The sales organization of specialty men to sell the full line on jobs is coming along as rapidly as can be expected, and in markets where these men have had three or more months actual selling experience, the results are gratifying, showing that intensified selling on jobs means introduction and sale of our specialties in larger and more profitable quantities.

General Competitive Conditions

Atlantic Sea Board—The Atlantic Gypsum Company operating a plant in New York City and a plant at Portsmouth, Mass., is active competition on full line of wall plasters and wallboard, manufacturing later at their Portsmouth Plant. Although they are holding the general price on wall plasters and No. 1 wallboard, they are introducing No. 2 wallboard at $20.00 into a large number of markets where No. 2 wallboard has not previously been sold.

The Pennsylvania Gypsum Company at Chester, Penn., is actively marketing plaster products, gypsum tile and are selling wallboard manufactured by the Universal Company at Akron. The plaster prices in the Metropolitan areas have degenerated to $7.00 Oakfield with the manufacturers making further concessions where necessary to get the business, The Pennsylvania Gypsum Com-11503 pany is demoralizing the Philadelphia and adjacent markets by cutting prices and delivering plaster block to the job at carload prices.

In Metropolitan, New York, Tompkins Brothers, Kelley Plaster & Board Company and Structural Gypsum Company are demoralizing the plaster and tile markets by delivering to the job by truck at carload prices.

White plaster prices are being reduced by competitive activity of the Newark Plaster Company in Metropolitan New York and prices have been lowered in Boston and Philadelphia through the introduction of German Plaster. To meet this competition, it will be necessary to make further investments in storage ware houses.

The Certainteed Company are shipping into the Sea Board markets from their Texas mill, offering wallboard regularly at $3.00 less than our delivered price and making a special offer to secure new dealers at $6.00 below this price on the first introductory car and larger dealers are taking three carloads at this lower rate, which is in reality a cut of $9.00 below our price.

The American Cement Plaster Company and Universal Companies are observing market prices, while the National is still offering mixed carloads of firsts at $25.00 and firsts billed as seconds at $30.00, averaging $25.00 per thousand on the carload.

Price conditions on plaster products are such that prices vary from $6.00 to $9.00 per ton, with no uniformity or stability, with possibility of reduction to lower mill base.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

Oakfield District—The National Gypsum Company is in full operation and aggressively selling plaster products, stucco, wallboard and crushed rock. They have offered stucco as low as $5.00 per ton on 10,000 tons contract basis, are now aggressively selling plaster board in small markets where formerly they could not reach, owing to the mixed car service, but are now manufacturing plaster products and can also give this service.

National Gypsum Company has secured some orders on crushed rock at presumably a lower price.

The Empire Gypsum Company is increasing its activity on plaster products, selling at lower prices, especially on large job operations, becoming very aggressive on block sales since entering into block manufacture.

Niagara Gypsum Company although inactive in the past on wallboard is now aggressive in the sale of cut down seconds for plaster board at lower prices than Rocklath and are making a drive on special jobs at lower prices.

The Beaver Products Company have, since their increase in block production, aggressively entered 11504 Metropolitan markets and established dealers who are demoralizing the retail situation.

Universal Gypsum Y Lime Company is especially active in Metropolitan New York and other large markets, and are using their lime sales to increase dealer establishment and have increased their organization for wallboard sales.

The Oakfield Gypsum Products Company is extending its sales of neat and sanded plaster. They formerly sold their entire output to their stockholders for mixing plant purposes but are now entering the dealer field.

The Atlas Rock Company, a subsidiary of the Atlas Portland Cement Company are now actively engaged in the sale of crushed rock to other Portland Cement Companies and has been successful in securing the requirements of a number of concerns.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

Ohio District—The American Gypsum Company is extending the sale of wallboard into markets outside of its logical area, and is demoralizing the wallboard business by offering seconds in markets where formerly only firsts were sold. They are without a connection for the distribution of wallboard in the southeast since the purchase of the Southern Gypsum Company by the Beaver Company and are now making mixed car shipments from their Gypsum, Ohio mill into this territory, which was formerly served from Plasterco. This concern is also aggressive in the sale of block through the entire territory it operates.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

Michigan District—Certainteed Products Company has improved the quality of its plaster and stucco and is still aggressively selling at a dollar or more less than the market, not only in its logical territory, but reaching out farther. They are shipping board from their Texas plant to Grand Rapids and are able to serve mixed cars of board and plaster. Their wallboard is offered regularly in both mixed and full carloads at $3.00 off of our list price plus exceptional inducements for trial orders to new dealers.

Certainteed has lowered the price on crushed rock in its endeavor to secure new establishment. They are selling as low as $6.00 to increase their stucco establishments.

The National Gypsum Company plant north of Alabaster is about ready to operate. In the meanwhile, the National Company has put forth an aggressive sales program into the territory for distribution from this mill and is serving the dealers already secured on the mixed car 11505 first and seconds campaign from their New York mill. If this plan goes into operation, there will be a further demoralization in the wallboard market.

Michigan Gypsum Company is again active in both rock and plaster at reduced prices and have lowered our rock basis at Grand Rapids 25¢ a ton.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

Fort Dodge—The Federal Gypsum Company is under new management and is making better products. They are consistently $2.00 below the market price, are not yet affecting dealer trade, but securing their business largely on large jobs. They are using cut prices to secure stucco and rock business and have been successful.

The Cardiff Gypsum Company is still $1.00 under the market on both dealer and large job sales throughout the entire area in which it operates.

Certainteed is offering board from Texas mill into this area on the same basis as any other areas.

The Interstate Tile Company manufacture gypsum tile at Joliet, Illinois from synthetic gypsum and are offering tile at low prices in the Chicago area. Both National Gypsum Company from their New York Plant and the American Gypsum Company from their Port Clinton Plant are offering seconds in Chicago and the Twin Cities, thus replacing $30.00 board with $20.00 board.

The Wassen Company is active in tile business at low prices and is after small dealer trade account general b siness depression.

Universal Gypsum Company is now making folded edge wallboard at Fort Dodge and has increased sales and advertising organization to push same. They are aggressive on mixed car shipments to smaller markets and on tile sales at lower prices in larger markets.

The Beaver Company also is manufacturing folded edge board at Fort Dodge with similar activity in sales and advertising on board, mixed cars and blocks.

On account of continued depression in the western agricultural sections, all Ft. Dodge manufacturers are extending sales activities into eastern territories thus aggravating over production conditions already existing, and are demoralizing price conditions in territories where they have no dealer establishment by selling jobs at dealer prices.

Certainteed is demoralizing the Ft. Dodge area by offering wallboard and plaster board at $3.00 off market with special inducements for initial orders.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

11506 Plasterco—Since the merging of the Southern Gypsum Company with the Beaver Products Company, this plant is producing better and more uniform material and is more aggressively sold by the Beaver Products Company's larger sales organization. This applies also to board shipped in from their Grand Rapids Plant, thus giving Beaver a mixed car proposition from their Saltville mill. Beaver is also aggressively selling tile from this plant.

Texas District—Certainteed wallboard plant is now in operation, and they are selling through their entire sales organization at $3.00 less than price that we offer on wallboard in any area of the United States. Their sales program reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. In addition to the $3.00 cut in price, they are making a special reduction of $6.00 on first car to any new dealers and allowing larger dealers three cars on this basis. We have traced orders netting them as low as $13.00 fob their plant on No. 1 board, but understand that their stop price is around $18.00. They are also offering plaster board at $3.00 off our regular price, and we are losing both No. 1 and No. 2 business to this concern and they have affected our plaster business somewhat by the lower price inducement on their wallboard in mixed cars.

Since the Universal is making folded edge wallboard at Rotan, they are very aggressively selling this commodity throughout their entire territories.

Crushed rock prices have been reduced by the Certainteed Company in Texas, trying to secure new establishment, they have been unsuccessful in their tonnage attempts, as we have met their prices which has resulted in a general lowering of mill base.

The Texas Cement Plaster Company is now licensed to manufacture the square folded edge and we can look for more aggressive competition from this concern, which will affect our mixed car shipments.

Although plaster prices have reacted from a $4.00 level to $7.00 level, the larger markets such as Kansas City,

New Orleans, Atlanta, Birmingham have sufficient protected tonnage so that we will be shipping low priced plaster for the next three or four months to come.

In Florida, the jobbers have protected themselves to such an extent that the market has not reached to the higher level.

The Gulf Gypsum Company at Falfurrias, Texas is again in active operation on crushed rock.

The Atlas Portland Cement Company is soliciting crushed rock from their plant in Oklahoma.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

Laramie District—Although business is practi-11507 cally dormant, all companies are aggressive and the Certainteed Company is affecting our mixed car business on account of the low price of their board in shipments of dark plaster from their Laramie Mill. We also find that the jobbers in the mountain states are selling Certainteed wallboard at lower prices and the smaller gypsum plants in this area are selling plaster at lower prices.

Every plaster manufacturer in this district is either making or distributing both plaster board and wallboard and can now parallel our mixed car service.

California District—Due to the extensive over production, this market is completely demoralized. Plaster in Southern and Northern California, although normally at a $7.00 mill base is being offered as low as $5.50 and plaster board has recently been reduced in price from $24.00 per thousand to $16.00, with a corresponding 10% reduction on wallboard. Due to competitive relationships such as Portland Cement purchases by Blue Diamond Company from the Riverside Portland Cement Co., and with the relationship between the Portland Cement Companies, it was necessary to reduce our price on crushed rock from $3.00 to $1.50 per ton to retain our business. The low price on plaster board and wallboard also applies to Washington and Oregon, although at present, there is no further price reduction in plaster. Shipments from these areas net us as low as $3.80 at Loveland.

Attention must be called to the general competitive situation in the building material industry. Due to the extreme demand during the large building program, new materials have been evolved which substitute older materials and old type materials have found new uses.

We see increased activity on the part of all competitive building material industries to hold present consumption, to regain lost establishment and use and to create new uses and substitution through Association activities by means of sales work, advertising and through work with building departments and codes. We also find that we are meeting greater restrictions in sales, due to more rigid enforcement of building codes and regulations.

We find our Sheetrock establishment and use assailed by use of materials of greater insulation value, such as Celotex, Masonite, Insulite, etc. This also applies to plaster board where these insulating boards are being used because of their insulating value. The Lime industry is working on establishing mixed mortar plants in the larger cities with some success.

The metal lath industry is concentrating on better plastering and is restricting sales of plaster board through code regulations and enforcement.

The Clay Tile and Brick and Portland Cement industries are spending more money in sales and advertising promotion. The lumber industry has just appropriated five million dollars for a campaign to regain their business in a fight against lumber substitutes.

Incidentally, Union activities are also playing a 11508 more prominent part in our sales restrictions.

Considering the activities of competitive industries, it may also be necessary for our company and our industry to meet these changed conditions and competitive industrial activities by similar expenditures for industrial advertising and promotion.

In conclusion, we face lower prices and lower tonnage, and these can somewhat be mitigated by increased sales of our newer commodities, but it is not reasonable to presume that with the principle activity centered on wallboard that wallboard profit losses can entirely be counteracted by increased specialty sales profits.

Gross sales for the first six months of 1927 were $16,046 465 as compared with $16,437,640 for the same period last year or a decrease of 2.4% but 49.1% greater than the average for the first six months of the previous seven years.

Sales expense increased 20.0% over the six months of 1926 as compared with the gross sales decrease of 2.4% and total tonnage decrease of 0.2%.

The Advertising Expense $506,074.96 represents a decrease of 5.7% of the 1926 expenditures same period.

The first half 1927 Sales Expense, plus the Advertising Expense equals $1,983,719.48, an increase of 11.1% over the first six months of 1926.

Purchased lime shipments for six months 1927 were 2071 tons as compared with 2988 tons six months last year or a decrease of 30.7%.

11510 Rock—Rock tonnage shows an increase of 9679 tons,—6.7%. This increase is largely due to the success of the introduction of New Brighton rock. However, we are suffering decreases at other mills due to new competitive plants now in operation.

In the Oakfield district the Atlas Portland Cement Co., are furnishing rock to their own plants and have taken away not only this tonnage, but that of other cement companies. They are also shipping their own plants in the southwest and southeast from their Wautonga, Oklahoma rock crushing plant, and are also furnishing other Portland Cement companies whom we formerly supplied.

The National Gypsum Company is after crushed rock business from both their Oakfield and northern Michigan plants. They have secured two of our former customers and thus have caused us generally to reduce prices about 35¢ per ton in Michigan.

We have lost the Texas Portland Cement Company to the Gulf Gypsum Company at Falfuras, Texas. There is also being promoted a gypsum rock crushing plant near Houston, Texas, in which the Texas Cement Companies are interested.

The Centerville Gypsum Company has become aggressive in the sale of crushed rock and are making lower prices than heretofore, and taking advantage of the lower freight rates in the area they serve.

We are making a drive to regain lost accounts and establish new accounts which will increase our tonnage, but will reduce the selling price on all customers we serve.

Price of rock is off 7%.

Stucco—Stucco shows a decrease of 19.4%. Part of this loss is due to the fact that in the spring of 1926 we served the stucco requirements of the Rock Plaster Company when they were repairing their mill. The balance of the loss is due to National and Certain-Teed sales to our trade at prices from $1.00 to $2.00 per ton lower than our prices.

Bulk stucco price is off 8.7%.

Within the last month we have been successful in securing a number of our old accounts. We are meeting all competition at competitive prices for this business.

Stucco Specialties—the sales are approximately the same as the previous year.

We have lost no accounts and we can increase this tonnage.

Neat Wall Plaster—Neat Wall Plaster shows a decrease of 2.3%.

Competition is aggressive in all territories and prices are generally demoralized. Large jobs are being sold from $1.00 to $3.00 under the former market price and practically all large cities are below our mill base.

11511 In the Metropolitan New York all up-state competitors are selling 50¢ below our price, netting them $6.50 Oakfield. It is our intention as soon as New Brighton needs tonnage to meet existing prices. Pennsylvania Gypsum Company and National are offering plaster at $1.00 below our price with as yet no success.

Washington, D. C., is on a $6.50 Oakfield base; Philadelphia $6.00; Baltimore, $6.50; and Boston $7.00 with specific jobs from 50¢ to $1.00 below these prices.

The small country territories are holding at generally $8.00 and $9.00 with the exception that specific jobs which are quoted $1.00 under.

In the central states larger markets are generally $1.00 below our $9.00 mill base, with National and Certain-Teed offering plaster generally from $1.00 to $2.00 less.

In the Fort Dodge area Cardiff and Centerville are exceptionally active at $1.00 to $2.00 below our market price and all large jobs at $2.00 off.

The southwest and southeast are slowly slipping back to the $4.00 price which was put in effect by the Texas Company last spring. The large cities such as Kansas City, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Fort Worth have ample protection on $4.00 or $5.00 to last them the balance of the year. In the smaller towns we are generally on a $7.00 base, but we find Certain-Teed and Texas selling for immediate shipment at prices lower than ours.

The Pacific situation shows no signs of improvement and our prices have been reduced another 50¢ a ton to meet the Blue Diamond competition who were delivering on the job at our dealers wholesale f. o. b. car prices.

Our policy is not to lose any business, and we are meeting any and all competition to protect and increase establishment and tonnage. At the present rate there is no doubt but what lower mill basis will prevail at all shipping mills.

Sanded Plaster—Sanded Wall Plaster shipments show a decrease of 3.8%. The competitive conditions in Sanded, from a price standpoint are not as extreme as Neat Plaster competition. Our principal losses are in Detroit and Cleveland, largely due to the decline in building and the wider use of Neat on larger jobs.

Plaster Board—Plaster Board shows an increase in footage of 45.4% with a price reduction of 2%. The campaign on Rocklath is showing consistent increases in the towns where introduced and adopted and there is no doubt that this business will continue to grow.

The total increase for the half year was 24,000,000 feet Competition is meeting Bundled Rocklath with cutdown wallboard bundled at lower prices.

11512 Sheetrock and Sterling—Sheetrock and Sterling show a decrease of 7.8% with a price decline of 2%.

Certain-Teed is more aggressive than in the past and are selling board at practically any price in order to get establishment and tonnage.

The National Company is operating its plants in the Oakfield and Michigan districts to capacity and are offering mixed cars of #1 and #2, both the same grade, averaging $25.00 per thousand.

We are meeting board competition by regaining customers lost to the National on price and are meeting Certain-Teed by the introduction of Sterling Board at $25.00 mill with freight based on 1250 lbs., which reduces the price approximately $6.50 to the dealer. This policy has not been in effect long enough to determine its success, but where it has been used if it has not secured the business it has cau[illegible] Certain-Teed to reduce their price $3.00 below the Sterling delivered price.

Gyplap—For the half year sales show a decline of 33.8%. We have not as yet discovered the causes of sales resistance of Gyplap and are experimenting with various sizes, thicknesses and price to develop the proper board which should sell.

Total Board Footage—Total board footage of all kinds show a gain of 2.8% for the half year with a loss in sales valuation of 3.8%.

Total footage for six months 1926.....	253,158,000
Total footage for six months 1927.....	260,139,000
Net sales valuation six months 1926.....	$6,481,691
Net sales valuation six months 1927.....	$6,237,943

Partition Tile—Partition tile shows a decline of 3.5% with a price decline of 14.6%. Practically all gypsum manufacturers are now selling tile and a number of manufacturers in anticipation of large business stocked their yards with tile and are offering these at extremely low prices to move before fall so as not to carry over the winter.

We believe that we can hold tonnage for the balance of the year equal to the previous year by meeting competition.

Hydrated Finishing Lime—Hydrated Finishing Lime shows a decrease of 1.1% and price increase of 3.5%. Prices on Hydrated Finishing Lime are stable with the 11513 exception of the larger markets and we are increasing our business by meeting existing prices.

Textone—Textone shows an increase of 57.4% as compared with the same period for the previous year, sales being 1,755,380 lbs. as compared with 1,115,386 lbs.

Textone net sales valuation 1926—$208,158 (6 months)
Textone net sales valuation 1927—$310,542 (6 months)
or a gain of 49.2%.

Oriental Stucco, Finish and Base—Sales for the first half of 1927, 7839 tons as compared with 8855 tons. The decrease in tonnage is due to price competition on other colored stuccos manufactured locally by such companies as the California Stucco Company or by plants operated in larger cities by the dealers.

We are meeting these specific conditions and believe a lower selling price on Oriental will result in greater sales, and that this business should revert to us.

Oriental is extremely popular and its quality and workmanship is superior to any other material.

Plastint—Sales for six months, 1927, 2250 tons, a gain of 48.4%.

Plastint is growing in distribution and this material offers greater tonnage possibilities than Oriental.

Pyrocell and Thermofill—Pyrocell shows a decline of 21.5%. This decrease is due to the fact that we are limiting the field of sales as our material has not been entirely satisfactory for the purposes intended, but believe the new formula just evolved should overcome our past difficulties and give us a healthy tonnage on this commodity.

Thermofill sales for the six months, 1966 tons, as compared with 452 tons during same period last year, or a gain of 435%

Our experience to date convinces us that we have in Thermofill a real insulating material which will develop into large tonnage and help fill the present demand for home insulation.

We are revamping our sales and advertising policies for the sale of Thermofill.

11514 General—We have eliminated, with the exception of the Saturday Evening Post and Country Gentleman (where contracts made it impossible), our advertising for the balance of the year and we are making a drive for better results on direct advertising which should result in considerable saving.

Sales organization is functioning having eliminated a large number of men who could not meet the present competitive conditions.

In general the men hired in the spring to sell direct on jobs in the larger cities are working out to the advantage of the company and the policy is helping hold our establishment as well as to introduce new materials.

We find that due to the extreme competitive conditions on all our commodities that the regular line men do not have very much opportunity for promotional work as their entire time is taken up in holding and regaining our accounts.

In general, we are going through a keen competitive fight with an over-production in all lines and competitors offering all commodities at lower prices to get tonnage and establishment.

Instead of a policy of stabilization on our part we are aggressively meeting all conditions on all commodities.

Gross sales for the year 1927 were $31,699,404 as compared with $33,540,389 for 1926, or a decrease of 5.5% but 38.1% increase over annual average for past seven years.

Sales expense increased 6% over 1926, as compared with the gross sales decrease of 5.5% and total tonnage decrease of 3.3%.

The Advertising Expense $846,268 represents a decrease of 20.8% of the 1926 expenditures.

The 1927 Sales Expense, plus the Advertising Expense, equals $3,490,077, a decrease of 2% from 1926.

Purchased lime shipments for 1927 were 3,377 tons as compared with 5,561 tons last year, or a decrease of 39.3%.

11516 The competitive conditions outlined in my last report have become more keen and aggravated. The price conditions anticipated and the price declines recommended are now a reality. There is not a commodity nor an area which is not now highly competitive. Prices in some areas have gravitated as low as cost. Following our recommendation in our last report, we are meeting any price made by any competitor on any commodity in order to hold and increase our establishment. It was necessary on January 20 to announce a reduction of $5.00 per thousand on Sheetrock to meet price concessions and lower prices offered by our competitors. It was also necessary to introduce and offer a subgrade board—Crown Wallboard—at a mill price of $20.00 per thousand, or ten dollars less than our regular Sheetrock price. This drastic policy of price decline was absolutely necessary in order to stabilize the market and to make it possible for us to meet competitive conditions.

It was also necessary to decrease our prices in the Northwest mountain area $5.00 per thousand to meet lower prices put in effect by Perfection Wallboard Company and Certainteed.

We also inaugurated the consignment plan after the Sales Meetings, which is showing some signs of success, having signed up as of February 1—230 contracts with dealers.

An estimated shrinkage in prices on the basis of same business secured last year on the new prices shows $2,087,000, but we hope with the above plan to increase our volume to overcome this somewhat.

Rock—Rock tonnage shows an increase of 11.7% and a price decrease of 11.9% as compared with last year, due to increased shipments from New Brighton. Anhydrite rock from New Brighton is now accepted by nearly all the cement producers in the seaboard field and this tonnage ought to increase at least 50% during 1928.

With the exception of shipments from Oakfield and New Brighton, there is price competition for crushed rock business in all areas. Prices have gradually declined and it was necessary to reduce prices to $1.60 per ton at Alabaster, meeting National competition; at Ft. Dodge meeting National and Atlas Portland Cement competition; and $1.60 Southard meeting Certainteed and Atlas Portland Cement competition.

We look for lower prices on crushed rock at all producing points.

Stucco—Stucco shows a decline in tonnage of 24.5% with a decrease in price for the year of 1.5%. For the last quarter decrease in price as compared with the same quarter last year shows 3% decline. Competition has been unusually severe on stucco. The National Gypsum Company, Certainteed, and Centerville, have reduced prices to our principal plate glass and terra cotta accounts to $4.50 per ton from Oakfield, Grand Rapids, Ft. Dodge, and Alabaster mills. We have lost several accounts, but feel sure that we will regain them.

11517 Stucco Specialties—German competition has decreased prices in Boston and Philadelphia and in addition the Pennsylvania Gypsum Company and Atlantic Gypsum Company have lowered the stucco specialty price on the Atlantic Seaboard. We have practically lost our Cuban business due to inability to meet their low prices.

Centerville Gypsum Company in the Western area has been making a drive on white goods, due to low plaster prices. We look for further reduction on white plaster.

Neat Wall Plaster—Neat wall plaster shows a tonnage decrease of 7.3% and a price decrease of 2.7%, as compared with 1927. In the Metropolitan New York area we are now selling on a $5.00 mill base, the price having declined 50¢ since the last quarter. Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore are now on $5.50 mill base and the general Oakfield mill base for specific jobs and larger city tonnage of the territory is on an average $6.00 level with country tonnage at $7.00.

In the central area Certainteed is maintaining its $5.00 Grand Rapids mill base and making special offerings of $4.00 to get the dealers' business. National is meeting Certainteed prices and as a consequence the large markets, Detroit, Cleveland, & Pittsburgh, are now on $7.00 and $6.00 bases. Due to the activity of National and Certainteed in the Chicago area, the price has been reduced to $5.70

Ft. Dodge from $8.00. Cardiff and Centerville are generally $2.00 below our $9.00 price in the Western area and Minneapolis has been reduced from $9.00 to $8.00 on account of competitive lower prices. It will be only a short time until the entire central and western areas will be on a $7.00, if not $6.00, base.

The Southwest and Southeast have degenerated from a $5.00 market at the last Directors' Meeting, to a general $3.50 market, plaster being offered as low as $3.00 for bulk tonnage for specific jobs. Some plaster has been sold by Texas Company as low as $2.50 and $2.00 mill on contract tonnage and offered at these prices to secure mixed car board business. The $3.50 price is general for the states of Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida.

In the Plasterco Area the larger markets have gravitated from $9.00 to $8.00 and the general mill base has been reduced to $9.00. Specific jobs are sold as low as $6.00.

The Laramie district has just been reduced from $8.00 to $5.00 by Certainteed. This will cause us considerable losses meeting this price in shipments from Piedmont and our dark plaster mills.

The Pacific Coast shows no signs of improvement, prices being the same as last quarter.

11518 Sanded Plaster—Sanded Plaster tonnage has declined 4% and the price shows a decrease of 2.3%. Prices are demoralized in the Oakfield area, due to local sanded plaster plants and the Oakfield producers offering low priced tonnage.

The Detroit market has been reduced $2.00 per ton, but Cleveland and Milwaukee are holding fairly well. There will be lower prices on sanded plaster at all producing points, due to the fact that with the low prices on neat it is necessary to further reduce sanded prices in order to equalize with neat plaster prices.

Plasterboard—Plasterboard shows an increase of 46.2% with price reduction of 3%. The total increase in footage for the year was 56,418,000 feet. Competition is quoting lower prices in larger markets, as they cannot sell their open edge bundled board at the same price as the folded edge Rocklath. We are not meeting these prices, however.

Competition is not seriously interested in plasterboard, simply making price concessions to hold their establishment. The gains made in 1927 should be increased in 1928.

Sheetrock & Sterling—Sheetrock and Sterling show a decrease of 12.9% with a price decline of 1.6%. We were successful during the last quarter in regaining a great number of accounts taken by National and Certainteed by price concessions. Certainteed competition has not abated, but with our new policy and lower price on Sheetrock and Crown and with the consignment plan, our business is being materially increased.

Due to Crown board, we are able to regain lost establishment and protect our mixed car business against competition.

Gyplap—For the year Gyplap shows a decline of 28.6% as compared with 1926. We are hopeful for increased footage and valuation on Gyplap, due to the change in size and concentration in markets where Gyplap business is available.

Total Board Footage—Total board footage of all kinds shows a gain of 1% for the year with a loss in valuation of 6.3%.

Total footage for the year 1926 was 511,620,000 ft.
Total footage for the year 1927 was 516,544,000 ft.
Net sales valuation for 1926..... $12,756,781
Net sales valuation for 1927..... $11,954,368

Partition Tile—Partition tile shows a decline in volume of 9.5% with a price decline of 11.2%. Competitors have not succeeded in moving large stocks on hand and are offering tile practically at cost in all areas which we are meeting wherever advisable to hold our establishment. Jobs below cost we are letting competitors have.

Hydrated Finishing Lime—Hydrated Finishing Lime has generally declined $1.00 per ton in price since last quarter. Hydrated finishing lime shows a decrease of 9.7% in volume with no appreci-11519 able price change. There has been a general price reduction of $1.00 per ton, and prices in the larger markets, due to increased competition and new factors in the business, are unstable. We are meeting these conditions and increasing our business by offering special inducement to the larger customers. Further price declines in Hydrated lime are inevitable.

Mason's Hydrate—Mason's Hydrate is in a demoralized condition, prices as low as $6.00, including bags, f. o. b. mill from all producing areas.

Textone—Textone shows an increase of 54.7% with a sales price decrease of 3.3%. Sales for the year 1926 were 2,414,244 pounds. Sales for 1927 were 3,734,037 pounds.

Textone net sales valuation 1926—$437,080
Textone net sales valuation 1927—$653,516.

Competition is becoming more keen and our competitors have in the last period made a drive for our sales force. We have lost several good salesmen on offers which we could not duplicate without demoralizing our own organization. Mr. Pringle reports there are now 61 competitive materials offered for texture work.

Oriental Stucco Finish & Base—Finish sales for 1927—11,596 tons, as compared with 12,598 tons for 1926, a decrease of 1002 tons. Sales valuation 1927—Finish, $382,786; Base, $52,454. This tonnage decrease is due to loss in residential building and price competition from locally manufactured colored stucco, by the California Stucco plants, and plants operated by dealers.

We have made prices necessary to hold and secure establishment in these markets and we look for a decided increase in tonnage for 1928. These local plants are slowly being eliminated.

Plastint—Sales for 1926—3,830 tons. Sales for 1927—5,850 tons, an increase of 52.7%. Sales valuation for 1927 $178,749. Plastint is now established through 700 dealers and is introduced and recognized as a regular commodity by the building trade. We are using the same sales methods as advocated for Oriental to overcome the local colored plaster competition, and 1928 should show a decided increase.

Thermofill—Sales for 1926—1,931 tons; for 1927—6,354 tons, an increase of 4,423 tons. Sales Valuation 1927, $111,159. Thermofill is growing in volume and distribution. We have now 750 dealers handling Thermofill. We have had splendid reaction from our National advertising and with the operation of the sales effort to be put forth in 1928, this business should increase.

Pyrocell—Pyrocell sales show a decline of 30.6%. We have overcome the difficulties with our new formulas and look for a slow steady growth in this commodity when sold for the purposes intended.

11520, Sabinite—Sales for 1927—779 tons. Sales for 1926—140 tons. Sales valuation for 1927, $52,741. Sales valuation for 1926, $10,673.

Our Architectural force is now devoting its entire time to Sabinite sales and the specifications which they are securing should result in jobs making a healthy increase in tonnage for 1928.

General—It has been recommended to the management that we increase our sales organization by putting on specialty men on all our specialties and also to concentrate on wallboard in the Southwestern area to replace shiplap, which offers excellent opportunity.

During the last quarter twelve picked men were sent to Texas to introduce ½" tongue and groove Sheetrock to replace shiplap for interior wall construction and have found that this opens up a virgin field which was untouched with sheetrock. These men sold from November 1 to February 1 by direct sales 2,238,760 feet of ½" Sheetrock and were instrumental in additional dealers sales of 820,534 sq. ft. It is our intention to augment these men with men in other states where this is common construction.

In general we look for a $5.00 mill base on plaster, $4.00 on Stucco, and $1.50 on rock, throughout the United States with a possible $20.00 price on Sheetrock, and the only hope of helping profits is to increase tonnage of our regular commodities by meeting competitive prices, enlarging establishment, and to build specialties by intensive and direct work.

What the competitive reaction to our new prices and policy will be we can not at this time state, but there is no doubt but what we will have to meet lower prices on subgrade board and it is our policy to meet any prices offered by any competitor on the low grade board, but to try to sell Sheetrock, to maintain Sheetrock profits and Sheetrock name and quality.

Gross sales for the first half 1928 were $14,553,229 as compared with $16,046,465, same period 1927, or a decrease of 9.3% but 19.1% above first six months average for past seven years.

Sales expense increased 2.7% over the first half of 1927, as compared with the gross sales decrease of 9.3% and total tonnage increase of 4.6%.

The Advertising Expense for the first six months of 1928 was $256,029, which represents a decrease of 52.7% of the expenditures of the same period last year.

The Sales Expense for the first half 1928, plus the Advertising Expense, equals $1,630,562, a decrease of 12.3% from the first half of 1927.

Rock—Rock tonnage shows an increase of 13.3% and a price decline of 21.7% as compared with the same period last year.

Rock prices have declined at all mills due to competitive activity offering lower prices to our rock accounts. We are meeting these situations individually and will secure more establishment.

Stucco—Stucco shows a decline in tonnage of 13.6% with a decrease in price of 14.3% as compared with the same period last year. We have regained 4% of this decline during the last three months and now have our lost accounts and new accounts so lined up so that we should regain lost tonnage by the end of the year.

Stucco Specialties—Stucco specialties show a decrease of 1.9% and a price decline of 3.5%. The price aggressers are the Pennsylvania Gypsum Company serving the Pennsylvania area and the Atlantic Gypsum Company in the Boston area. They are trying to increase establishment through the price route and we are meeting same and have so far lost no establishment. The Texas Company has made a price of $8.50 on white goods against our $10.50 and we are meeting same by offering Sweetwater material at the Texas price where necessary to hold establishment, but are holding our Southard goods at the regular market price.

Neat Wall Plaster—Neat Wall plaster tonnage is practically the same as the same period last year with a price decline of 13½%. Prices are continually lowered by competition. Since last report the seventeen Southeastern and Southwestern states have been reduced to a $2.00 price f. o. b. mill on dark plaster. Texas Company is quoting $4.00 on white cement plaster. The Ft. Dodge mill base has been reduced from $9.00 to $4.00. The State of Michigan is from $9.00 to $6.00; Indiana from $9.00 to $7.00. Chicago is now on a $3.60 mill base with Detroit, Cleveland, and the larger central cities from $4.00 to $5.00. Oakfield mill base is $4.50 to $5.00. Metropolitan New York, Philadelphia, and Boston areas are on a $4.00 to $4.50 with Baltimore at a $3.50. The Certainteed Company has refused to accept dark plaster at less than $2.50 and we are protecting their trade for the balance of the year for $2.00, resulting in a large gain in tonnage and establishment. We look for still lower prices on cement plaster.

Sanded Plaster—Sanded Plaster tonnage has increased .9% (9/10%) with a price decline of 4.2%. Although sanded plaster prices are fairly well established, our tonnage on sanded plaster is falling off due to the low price on neat plaster; contractors now make their own job mix rather than use sanded plaster. It may be necessary to reduce sanded prices in order to hold some of the trade to sanded. However we will let it gravitate where it will.

11523 Plasterboard—Plasterboard shows an increase of 48.9% and a price decline of 3.2% as compared with the same period last year. The total increase in footage for the half year was 37,573,000 sq. ft. Competition is now offering cut stock bundled plasterboard at $10.00 to $12.50 mill. However, we have not as yet reduced any prices on Rocklath, but are still holding the same $15.00 price. We are meeting competitive board with our own bundled cut stock. We believe we can hold the situation for the balance of the year with increased tonnage.

All Wallboard—Wallboard shows a gain of 3.7% with a price decline of 17.9% as compared with the same period last year. Meeting competitive prices has regained establishment and increased tonnage.

We are endeavoring to maintain a differential of $5.00 between Sheetrock and Crown and Sterling board and have been successful in holding 65% of the footage on Sheetrock for the first 6 months; however, for the month of July this percentage has been reduced to 48%.

Due to Certainteed's activities, who are now offering wallboard for $12.00 in all areas except the central area where they are on a $15.00 price, Crown has gravitated to $14.00 and $16.00 which was necessary to hold establishment and get tonnage. With the wide spread between $14.00 on Crown and $25.00 on Sheetrock, making a $11.00 differential, it has been necessary during July to drop the price of Sheetrock in order to hold Sheetrock in the markets. In these areas we are now quoting Crown at $14.00 against Certainteed's $12.00 board and holding Sheetrock at $18.00 and the same applies proportionally where other prices on Certainteed prevail. We look for further declines both in Sheetrock and Crown prices with increased tonnage and establishment.

Gyplap—Gyplap shows a decline of 15.4% for the period. However, during the last quarter shipments have been improving.

Total Board Footage—Total board footage shows a gain of 17.1% with a loss in valuation of 25.7%, not including consignments.

Total footage for the 6 months of 1928—302,834,000 sq. ft.
Total footage for the 6 months of 1927—258,585,000 sq. ft.
Net sales valuation for 6 months 1928—$5,808,102.00
Net sales valuation for 6 months 1927— 6,211,717.00

Partition Tile—Partition tile footage for the period is practically the same as for the first half of 1927 with a price decline of 18.2%. For the first quarter of 1928 there was a loss in volume of 22% as compared with the same quarter of 1927, but we have made up this loss and the balance of the year will show greater gains. Partition tile will sell at cost, due to competitors moving stocks on hand.

Hydrated Finishing Lime—Hydrated Finishing Lime shows an increase in volume of 18.2% and a price decline of 12.4%. We are increasing both establishment and tonnage—however look for lower prices.

11524 Masons Lime—Masons Lime is still on a $6.00 mill base. We are increasing both tonnage and establishment.

Textone—Textone shows an increase of 39.2% with a price decline of 2½%.

Sales for 1st 6 months 1927—1,755,385 pounds.
Sales for 1st 6 months 1928—2,443,047 pounds.

This increase is largely in the Metropolitan New York area and in the Texas district where the combination of Tongue and Groove Sheetrock and Textone are replacing shiplap, canvas and wallpaper. We are making a drive on this class of construction with excellent prospects for both Sheetrock and Textone.

Textone net sales valuation 6 months 1928—$421,095.
Textone net sales valuation 6 months 1927— 310,542.

Oriental Stucco Finish and Base—Finish sales for the 6 months of 1928—6,408 tons as compared with 5,717 tons for the same period 1927, an increase of 691 tons.

Sales valuation for 6 months 1928—Finish —$207,428.
Sales valuation for 6 months 1928—BaseCoat — 18,513.

With the new plant at Sweetwater giving better service and uniformity of color, the tonnage and valuation will be further increased.

Plastint.—Plastint sales for the 6 months of 1927 were 2,250 tons; same period 1928—2,901 tons, an increase of 651 tons or 29.%. Sales valuation for the 6 months 1928—$84,760. Now that the new formula is satisfactory, eliminating bond complaints, we believe Plastint will show further increases.

Thermofill—Thermofill sales for the 6 months of 1927—1,966 tons as compared with 3,458 tons for the same period 1928, showing an increase of 1,491 tons. Sales valuation for the 6 months of 1928—$61,506. The National Gypsum Company and American Gypsum Company are now offering a substitute for Thermofill at $5.00 less than ours. We have not as yet met this price condition.

Sabinite—Sabinite sales for the 6 months of 1928—679 tons as compared with 277 tons for the same period 1927. Sales valuation for 1928—$44,206. The sales force working on Sabinite is showing results in increased specifications and sales.

Consignments—Total materials shipped out on the consignment plan for the 6 months 1928:

	Rocklath	2,745,517 sq. ft.
	Cutstock	225,864 sq. ft.
	Sheetrock	8,384,613 sq. ft.
	Crown	4,316,854 sq. ft.
	Sterling	4,281,132 sq. ft.
	Gyplap	377,127 sq. ft.
	Total Board	20,331,107 sq. ft.
11525	Oriental Stucco Finish	63 tons
	Plastint	152 tons
	Thermofill	620 tons
	Textone	74,710 lbs.

Valuation of all materials on consignment—$470,611.

An interesting feature of our consignment plan is that returns made by the dealers are on the old prices of $25.00 for Sheetrock and $20.00 for Crown and Sterling, very few price reductions having been made. Gross profit on the material sold by the dealers from consignment stock during the first six months amounted to $61,331 on sales of $118,298.

We have 927 dealers on the consignment plan as of June 30, 1928.

General—Competition is more aggressive than last quarter and there is no market on any of our materials. We are trying to sell all products at a differential above our competitors' prices and are making a consistent effort to hold Sheetrock rather than sell Crown, however, losing no establishment or footage on account of price. We are showing consistent gains in tonnage and establishment on all commodities and the policy inaugurated to meet competition in order to get increased tonnage to reduce costs is showing in profits. Commodities showing an increase in tonnage as compared with the previous year show less losses than the price decline on the previous year's tonnage.

During the second quarter the Sales Department has decentralized, establishing District Offices, localizing its sales efforts under direct management for closer contact with the trade which is resulting in increased business. We now have in effect the Boston, Philadelphia, Metropolitan, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, and Dallas District Offices and before the first of September will have opened up offices in Atlanta, Memphis, Omaha, and Minneapolis. In all there will be 15 district offices.

We look for further price recessions on all commodities in all areas, but believe that our new plan of organization will show consistent gains in establishment and tonnage which will mitigate to some extent the results of price declines.

A general survey of price and tonnage conditions by commodities for the first quarter of 1929, as compared with same period for the previous year is listed below.

Rock—Rock tonnage increased 12%. Price declined 5.4%. Rock prices seem stabilized in practically all sections. We are preparing to increase our tonnage for the new mills.

Stucco—Stucco tonnage increased 19½%; price declined 8.8%. Prices seem stabilized on this commodity. Our program to secure additional establishment and tonnage has developed an increased business.

Stucco Specialties—Stucco Specialties decreased 1.7% in tonnage; price declined 11.3%. Prices are still declining on white goods, due to aggression of Certainteed and Atlantic Gypsum Companies on this commodity group.

Neat Wall Plaster—Neat Wall Plaster tonnage increased 3.6%. Price declined 34.6%. The Southeastern and Southwestern areas have stabilized on a $2.00 mill base and the balance of the country at practically $4.00 with the exception of some of the larger markets, which are at $3.50 and $3.60. Competitors are offering plaster in some localities and on large jobs at $3.50, which will result in further price declines, as also will our aggression to get tonnage at competitive prices for the new mills.

Sanded Plaster—Sanded Plaster decreased 17.1%. Price declined 19.5%. Sanded Plaster tonnage and prices are still decreasing due to the economic use of low priced neat plaster.

11527 Plasterboard—Plasterboard increased 7%; price declined 9.4%. Total footage increase for the period was 3,545,000 sq. ft. It has been necessary to reduce prices in practically all large markets where plasterboard has been established, on account of competitors offering cutstock and plasterboard at $10.50 to $12.00. We are meeting this competition with unbranded plasterboard and cutstock for the lower prices where possible, but look for a general $13.00 price on Rocklath in all markets, with larger percentage of cutstock. Plasterboard will show continued healthy increases in footage.

Wallboard—Wallboard increased 10.4%. Price declined 24.4%. We maintained 42.5% of the wallboard business on Sheetrock at an average price of $20.06 per thousand. We are meeting competition and regaining establishment with Crown Board, which has declined to an average of $14.63 per thousand in the month of March. It has also been necessary, due to the rapidly declining prices on Crown, to adjust Sheetrock to lower levels in most markets.

We have 843 dealers on consignment selling 5,897,501 square feet for the first quarter.

Gyplap—Gyplap declined 8.7%. In order to increase footage we are analyzing price and market conditions on this commodity with hopes of betterment.

Total Board Footage—Total board footage of all kinds increased 9%. Price declined 20.4%.

Total footage for the 3 Mos. 1929—149,082,000 ft.
Total footage for the 3 Mos. 1928—136,781,000 ft.
Net sales valuation—3 Mos. 1929—$2,356,700
Net sales valuation—3 Mos. 1928—$2,715,152

Partition Tile—Partition Tile increased 47.8%. Price declined 24.8%. This increase due to meeting competitive prices in all markets.

Hydrated Lime Finish and Masons.—Total Hydrated Lime increased 5.8%; price declined 16.4%. Competition becoming severe and there is every indication of still lower prices.

Paint Products—All Paint Products increased 3½%; price declined 13.2%. Sales for first quarter 1929, 1,212,805 pounds.

Paint Products net sales valuation 1st 3 Mos. 1929—$184,912.
Paint Products net sales valuation 1st 3 Mos. 1928—$205,426.

Competition is more keen, with lower prices in prospect. It is necessary to introduce a lower priced Textone to meet the competitive situation.

Oriental Stucco. Finish & Base.—Oriental Finish sales decreased 31%; price declined 9½%. Due to the rapid growth of local mixing plants, further price cuts will be necessary to hold establishment, and plans are in progress to meet this local manufacturing condition.

Oriental Base Coat increased 16.8%; price declined 6.8%. Manufacturing this commodity at the new mills will increase its distribution.

11528 Plastint—Plastint increased 60.9%; price declined 14½%. This commodity is increasing, but we are meeting the same conditions of local manufacture as with Oriental Finish and the same policy in regard to price and distribution will be followed.

Thermofill—Thermofill sales practically the same, price declined 6½%. We are meeting new competition, both in the gypsum industry and from other industries on this material. Prospects are for increased tonnage at lower prices.

Sabinite—Sabinite tonnage practically the same, with increase of 5½% in price. This price increase is due to shipments being made in territories where we do not absorb freight. With the change in the acoustical organization, this volume should be increased.

Metal Lath Products—Metal Lath sales 264,290 sq. yds., total sales valuation, including accessories, $53,098. 85% of sales territories show distribution on Metal Lath. 20% of total business was represented in carloards and 80% in less-carload business, of which 60% was in mixed cars with other gypsum products. Sales valuation doubled each successive month. Prospects are very much greater for second quarter. We really got a late start on metal lath, as our display kits, price lists, literature, etc., were not available until nearly March 1.

Standard X Lath Base Coat & Accessories.—Sales of Standard X Lath for the first quarter total 744,728 sq. ft. 971 tons of Standard X Base Coat plaster was sold. 1,221,248 lineal feet flat strips, 289,080 ft. of angles, and 51,864 lineal feet of corner bead was sold.
6424

The sales force are very enthusiastic over Standard X System, and on the basis of the first jobs established in the important markets, prospects seem exceedingly good for the second quarter.

We have established 76 Licensed Dealers, 55 Licensed Contractors, and have sold approximately 100 jobs during the first quarter.

A BETTER SYSTEM OF WALL AND CEILING CONSTRUCTION

The sample enclosed is an actual section cut from a piece of Bestwall.

Bestwall comes in pieces three-eighths of an inch thick, forty-seven and five eighths inches wide, and is made in stock lengths of 6, 7, 8, 8½ and 10 feet. It is purposely made a little less than forty-eight inches wide to simplify setting and filling and finishing the joints.

You can always identify Bestwall by the distinctive Bestwall trade-mark on the back of each piece and the exclusive Bestwall tapered edge.

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE

ALEXANDER S. SPERR, OF BUFFALO, NEW YORK, ASSIGNOR, BY MESNE ASSIGNMENTS, TO CERTAIN-TEED PRODUCTS CORPORATION, A CORPORATION OF MARYLAND

PLASTER-BOARD MANUFACTURE

Application filed January 12, 1927. Serial No. 160,826.

This invention pertains to the manufacture of composite boards and the like, and among other objects aims to provide a new and superior type of board.

The invention consists in the novel combinations and methods, herein described or claimed, for carrying out the above object and such other objects as will hereinafter appear.

The character of the invention may be best understood by referring to one illustrative construction embodying the invention, such as that shown for example, in the accompanying drawings, in which:

Fig. 1 is a view in perspective of a board forming apparatus and board during the process of the board construction;

Fig. 2 is a view taken on line 2—2 of Fig. 1;

Fig. 3 is a view taken on line 3—3 of Fig. 1;

Fig. 5 is a perspective view of the completely formed board.

The illustrative composite board is typified herein by a plaster board or the like which is composed of a plastic body material contained between two fibrous cover sheets, one at least of the cover sheets having its margins folded and strengthened to reenforce the corners and edges of the plastic body. In the present instance, the margins of the bottom sheet are folded over the edges of the plastic body and retroverted to reenforce the edges and corners of the sheet, there being a colored strengthening material inclosed by the margins to further reenforce the edges of the sheet and render a distinctive marking to the finished board. While only the bottom sheet is illustrated with overturned edges it will be understood that the margins of the upper sheet may be appropriately folded or reenforced and made distinctive.

According to the illustrative method of manufacture the board is made in a continuous strip with one of the cover sheets preformed into a trough-like container or mold and also advantageously reenforced along the edges, and after an interval plastic material is deposited in the container or mold and covered with another cover sheet. Thus constructed, the board is then subjected to forming devices or rolls which reduce it to the proper thickness. At any appropriate period, subsequently to forming, the board may be cut into suitable lengths and transferred to dryers where all excess moisture is removed.

Referring to illustrative apparatus and process shown in the drawings, two cover sheets 1 and 2 are fed from supply rolls into the receiving end of the apparatus, sheet 1 being first formed to receive a plastic body material 3 and the other sheet 2 being adhered thereto for covering the body material.

Bottom cover sheet 1 is constructed to provide distinctive and reenforced edges, and is adapted to form a trough or receptacle into which the plastic body may be poured and contained during the formation of the board. Such a structure is accomplished in this instance, by turning or folding margins 4 upwardly and retroverting them to incloss a distinctive plaster core which will have first been deposited in a thin ribbon along the margins of the sheet, after which the core is subjected to pressure for accelerating setting thereof and intimately bonding it to the sheet. The sheet is cut to the proper width and traversed over plate 5 which has on opposite sides folding horns 6 to engage and overturn the margins. Folding of the margins is facilitated by scoring the sheet along lines 7 and 8 by any conventional scoring device.

Plastic material 9 advantageously distinctively colored, is deposited on the bottom sheet along the margins of the sheet near score line 7 in a thin stream from a source 10, after which it is inclosed by the folded margins and pressed into a thin layer with the folded margins approximating the contour of the underlying sheet. This plastic material may advantageously differ in kind or color from that plastic material which makes up the body of the board, or it may differ only in color. It will be referred to throughout the specification and claims as colored plastic material to distinguish from the plaster body material. The colored plaster, for example, may be ordinary gypsum plaster colored red to contrast with its original color which is substantially white. Or the colored plaster may be of a material which will not only produce distinctive edges but one specially prepared which will also give strengthened or reenforced edges. Edges which contrast with the main body portion of the board are distinguishing and distinctive, thereby serving admirably for trade-mark purposes.

After being folded to enclose the colored plaster, the margins of the lower sheet are subjected to pressure means which accelerate the setting of the plaster, bond the plaster to the sheet and form the margins into the desired shape. Pressure means for shaping the edges are illustrated by supporting roll 11 over which the paper traverses, edge roll 12, and pressure roll 13. Supporting roll 11 and edge roll 12 are cylindrical in configuration and are preferably arranged at right angles to each other to provide a square corner on the sheet. Pressure roll 13 has a double conical periphery for cooperating with the overturned margin to carry the folded edges inwardly and to squeeze the colored plaster into a relatively thin layer which is intimately bonded with the sheet. Pressure hastens setting, and hence the formed edges are rigid and strong enough to act as a trough for receiving and holding the plaster. Rollers of different contour or the present rollers differently arranged will give various shapes to the overturned margins and the colored plaster. After the pressure is applied to the margins, the sheet is thus formed into a substantial rigid trough-like container ready to receive the plaster body material which is distributed uniformly over the sheet between the upturned edges.

Top sheet 2 is narrowed to the proper width and brought into union with the plaster as the board thus constructed is subjected to pressure rolls 14. Preferably sheet 2 is narrowed to seat on the plaster body and lie substantially flush with the upturned edges. The colored plaster is sufficiently rigid to retain the shape of the edges during the time that the board is subjected to the forming rolls, altho plates 15 may be advantageously located on each side of the machine to contact with the edges, thereby preventing any deformation which might occur when the board is subjected to the forming rolls.

It will be obvious from the foregoing disclosure, that my invention is not limited to the details of the illustrative embodiment above described, since these may be variously modified. Moreover, it is not indispensable that all features of my invention be used conjointly, since it will be obvious to those skilled in the art, that various schemes may be advantageously employed in various other combinations and subcombinations.

Having described one embodiment of my invention, I claim:

1. A plaster board comprising a plaster body, cover sheets for facing the body, margins on one of the cover sheets being folded over the edge of the body and retroverted, and plaster material inclosed within the folds to reenforce the edge of the board.

2. A plaster board comprising a plaster body, cover sheets for facing opposite sides of the body, margins of one cover sheet being upturned over the edge of the body and retroverted to reenforce the upturned edge and a substantial portion of sheet adjacent the upturned edge, and plaster material inclosed within the retroverted margin.

3. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet, margins of the sheet folded at an angle to the said sheet to provide upturned edges and then retroverted, and an adhesive material for bonding the margins of the sheet.

4. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle to provide reenforced upturned edges between which a plastic mass is adapted to be contained, and means for retaining the margins in folded position.

5. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle to provide reenforced upturned edges between which a plastic mass is adapted to be contained, and plaster means bonded to the margins to retain same in folded position.

6. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle thereto to provide upturned edges, a plaster material deposited on the sheet adjacent the folded edge, and an extension of the margins retroverted towards the sheet to enclose the plaster material.

7. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a film of adhesive along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto to provide upturned edges, and compressing the adhesive into contact with the folded margins.

8. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a ribbon of adhesive along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto to provide upturned edges, retroverting a portion of the margins over the adhesive, applying pressure to the adhesive, and filling the space between the upturned edges with plastic material.

9. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a ribbon of plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto, retroverting a portion of the margins over the plastic material, accelerating the setting of the plastic material to support the folding margins, feeding a plastic material between the folded margins, and adhering a face sheet to the plastic material.

10. The method of fabricating composition board by feeding a ribbon of plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins at an angle to the sheet, applying pressure to the plastic ribbon, depositing plastic material between the folded margins, and facing the plastic material with a cover sheet.

11. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a colored plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, retroverting the margins over the colored plastic material, folding the retroverted margins at an angle to the sheet to provide edges, depositing plastic material between the edges, and adhering a cover sheet to the plastic material.

SPECIFICATION

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

BE IT KNOWN, that I, Alexander S. Speer, a citizen of the United States, residing in the City of Buffalo, County of Erie, State of New York, have invented certain new and useful improvements in and I do hereby declare the following to be a full, clear and exact description of the invention, such as will enable others skilled in the art to which it appertains, to make and use the same:

This invention pertains to the manufacture of composite boards and the like, and among other objects aims to provide a new and superior type of board.

The invention consists in the novel combinations and methods, herein described or claimed, for carrying out the above object and such other objects as will hereinafter appear.

The character of the invention may be best understood by referring to one illustrative construction embodying the invention, such as that shown for example, in the accompanying drawings, in which:

Fig. 1 is a view in perspective of a board forming apparatus and board during the process of the board construction;

Fig. 2 is a view taken on line 2 -- 2 of Fig. 1;

Fig. 3 is a view taken on line 3 -- 3 of Fig. 1;

Fig. 5 is a perspective view of the completely formed board.

The illustrative composite board is typified herein by a plaster board or the like which is composed of a plastic body material contained between two fibrous cover sheets, one at least of the cover sheets having its margins folded and strengthened to reenforce the corners and edges of the plastic body. In the present instance, the margins of the bottom sheet are folded over the edges of the plastic body and retroverted to reenforce the edges and corners of the sheet, there being a colored strengthening material inclosed by the margins to further reenforce the edges of the sheet and render a distinctive marking to the finished board. While only the bottom sheet is illustrated with overturned edges it will be understood that the margins of the upper sheet may be appropriately folded or reenforced and made distinctive.

According to the illustrative method of manufacture the board is made in a continuous strip with one of the cover sheets [illegible] into a trough-like container or mold and also advantageously reenforced along the edges, and after an interval plastic material is deposited in the container or mold and covered with another cover sheet. Thus constructed, the board is then subjected to forming devices or rolls which reduce it to the proper thickness. At any appropriate period, subsequently to forming, the board may be cut into suitable lengths and transferred to dryers where all excess moisture is removed.

Referring to illustrative apparatus and process shown in the drawings, two cover sheets 1 and 2 are fed from supply rolls into the receiving end of the apparatus, sheet 1 being first formed to receive a plastic body material 3 and the other sheet 2 being adhered thereto for covering the body material.

Bottom cover sheet 1 is constructed to provide distinctive and reenforced edges, and is adapted to form a trough or receptacle into which the plastic body may be poured and contained during the formation of the board. Such a structure is accomplished in this instance, by turning or folding margins 4 upwardly and outwardly thus to inclose a distinctive plaster core which will have first been deposited in a thin ribbon along the margins of the sheet, after which the core is subjected to pressure for accelerating setting thereof and intimately bonding it to the sheet. The sheet is cut to the proper width and traversed over plate 5 which has an opposite side folding, bevel 6 to engage and overturn the margins. Folding of the margins is facilitated by scoring the sheet along lines 7 and 8 by any conventional scoring device.

Plastic material 3 advantageously distinctively colored, is deposited on the bottom sheet along the margins of the sheet near score line 7 in a thin stream from a nozzle 10, after which it is inclosed by the folded margins and pressed into a thin layer with the folded margins approximating the contour of the underlying sheet. This plastic material may advantageously differ in kind or color from that plastic material which makes up the body of the board, or it may differ only in color. It will be referred to throughout the specification and claims as colored plastic material to distinguish from the plaster body material. The colored plaster, for example, may be ordinary gypsum plaster colored red to contrast with its original color which is substantially white. Or the colored plaster may be of a material which will not only produce distinctive edges but one specially prepared which will also give strengthened or reenforced edges. Edges which contrast with the main body portion of the board are distinguishing and distinctive, thereby serving admirably for trade-mark purposes.

After being folded to enclose the colored plaster, the margins of the lower sheet are subjected to pressure means which accelerate the setting of the plaster, bond the plaster to the sheet and form the margins into the desired shape. Pressure means for shaping the edges are illustrated by supporting roll 11 over which the paper traverses, edge roll 12, and pressure roll 13. Supporting roll 11 and edge roll 12 are cylindrical in configuration and are preferably arranged at right angles to each other to provide a square corner on the sheet. Pressure roll 13 has a double conical periphery for cooperating with the overturned margin to carry the folded edges inwardly and to squeeze the colored plaster into a relatively thin layer which is intimately bonded with the sheet. Pressure hastens setting, and hence the formed edges are rigid and strong enough to act as a trough for receiving and holding the plaster. Rollers of different contour or the present rollers differently arranged will give various shapes to the overturned margins and the colored plaster. After the pressure is applied to the margins, the sheet is thus formed into a substantial rigid trough-like container ready to receive the plaster body material which is distributed uniformly over the sheet between the upturned edges.

Top sheet 2 is narrowed to the proper width and brought into union with the plaster as the board thus constructed is subjected to pressure rolls 14. Preferably sheet 2 is narrowed to seat on the plaster body and lie substantially flush with the upturned edges. The colored plaster is sufficiently rigid to retain the shape of the edges during the time that the board is subjected to the forming rolls, althe plates 15 may be advantageously located on each side of the machine to contact with the edges, thereby preventing any deformation which might occur when the board is subjected to the forming rolls.

It will be obvious from the foregoing disclosure, that my invention is not limited to the details of the illustrative embodiment above described, since these may be variously modified. Moreover, it is not indispensable that all features of my invention be used conjointly, since it will be obvious to those skilled in the art, that various schemes may be advantageously employed in various other combinations and subcombinations.

Having described one embodiment of my invention, I claim:

1. A plaster board comprising a body material, cover sheets for facing the opposite sides of the body material, and colored material deposited along the edges of the body material to contrast therewith and provide a distinctive edge for the board.

2. A plaster board comprising a plastic body material, cover sheets for facing the opposite sides of the plastic material, and a plastic material contrasting in color with the body material for marking the edges of the board distinctive.

3. A plaster board comprising a plastic body, cover sheets for facing the body, a strip adhered to the edge of the plaster body, and means located adjacent the strip to contrast with the color of the plastic body.

4. A plaster board comprising a plastic body, cover sheets for facing the body, one of said sheets having margins overturned to engage the edge of the body, and means inserted between the overturned margins and the plastic body to provide a contrasting color along the edges.

5. A plaster board comprising a plaster body, cover sheets for facing the body, margins on one of the cover sheets being folded over the edge of the body and retroverted, and plaster material inclosed within the folds to reenforce the edge of the board.

6. A plaster board comprising a plaster body, cover sheets for facing opposite sides of the body, margins of one cover sheet being upturned over the edge of the body and retroverted to reenforce the upturned edge and a substantial portion of sheet adjacent the upturned edge, and plaster material inclosed within the retroverted margin.

7. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet, margins of the sheet folded at an angle to the said sheet, and an adhesive material for bonding the margins of the sheet.

4 8. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle to provide reinforced edges, and means for retaining the margins in folded position.

5 9. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle to provide reinforced edges, and plaster means bonded to the margins to retain same in folded position.

6 10. In an article of manufacture, a fibrous sheet having the margins thereof folded at an angle thereto to provide reinforced edges, a plaster material deposited on the sheet adjacent the folded edge, and an extension of the margins retroverted towards the sheet to enclose the plaster material.

7 11. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a film of adhesive along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto to provide reinforced edges, and compressing the adhesive into contact with the folded margins.

8 12. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a ribbon of adhesive along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto to provide reinforced edges, retroverting a portion of the margins over the adhesive, and applying pressure to the adhesive.

9 13. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a ribbon of plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins of the sheet at an angle thereto, retroverting a portion of the margins over the plastic material, accelerating the setting of the plastic material to support the folding margins, feeding a plastic material between the folded margins, and adhering a face sheet to the plastic material.

10 14. The method of fabricating composition board by feeding a ribbon of plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, folding the margins at an angle to the sheet, applying pressure to the plastic ribbon, depositing plastic material between the folded margins, and facing the plastic material with a cover sheet.

M. The method of fabricating composition board characterized by feeding a colored plastic material along the margins of a fibrous sheet, retroverting the margins over the colored plastic material, depositing plastic material between the margins, and adhering a cover sheet to the plastic material.

edge portions, the same being formed by intermingling colloidal material with the plastic mass along the edges of the board. While the toughened mixture does differ from the plastic mass in some characteristics there is no disclosure that there is any contrast in color. The same is true of Armstrong 1,878,220.

Birdsey 1,886,207 shows an open edge plaster board having the margins retroverted to reinforce the corners of the cover sheets. In applicant's device, the margins of the sheet (or sheets) are folded to provide edges for the plastic mass, thereby reinforcing the corners of the board and at the same time fusing the edges.

Johns 418,819 pertains to roofing and not to plaster board.

The colored material is deposited beneath the folded and retroverted margins and hardened, thereby providing substantially rigid edges on the sheet between which the plastic mass may be deposited on the sheet.

Claims 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 have been further amended to include the upturned edges which provide fusing for the edges of the plastic mass.

Claims 1 - 4 inclusive specify material deposited along the edges of the body which contrasts with the color of the plaster body.

Claim 6 specifies the margins of the cover sheet upturned over the edge of the plaster body and retroverted.

Claims 13 and 14 stand allowed.

Favorable reconsideration of the rejected claims is requested.

Respectfully submitted,

Attorney for Applicant.

Trade Mark	189,933	Sept.30,1924	used since Nov.1,1915

Claims 1, 2 and 3 are again rejected on Armstrong of record. The nature of the composition used at the edge of the board is such as to give a colored edge. These claims are also rejected as being met by the trade marks cited above showing boards having colored edges.

The rejection of claim 4 is repeated. Schumacher shows the margins overturned to engage the edge of the body. The specification of the color of the plaster material does not define any structure over Schumacher who also shows a plastic material enclosed by the margins. The color has no structural utility and no cooperative relation with the remaining structure. The color limitation in claims 1 to 3 is likewise of no patentable significance for the same reasons.

Claim 7 is again rejected on Birdsey who shows the margins folded and an adhesive for binding the margins. The amendment to this claim cannot be entered since the word "sheets" does not occur in this claim.

The amendment to claim 15 cannot be entered. The word "materials" is not found in line 3.

Claims 5, 6, 8 to 14 are allowable.

AMENDMENT

Hon. Commissioner of Patents,
Washington, D. C.

Sir:

Responsive to the Office Action of December 7, 1928 please amend the above entitled application as follows:

Cancel claims 1 to 3 inclusive.

Claim 4, line 3 before "means" insert reenforcing: Same claim line 4 cancel "to provide" and insert providing.

Claim 7, line 2, after "sheet", first occurrence, insert to provide upturned edges and then retroverted.

Claim 15, line 3, after "material" insert folding the retroverted margins at an angle to the sheet to provide edges.

Add the following claims:

16. A plaster board comprising a poly material, cover sheets for facing the opposite sides of the body material, one of said sheets having margins overturned to engage the edges of the body material, and colored material deposited under said overturned edges to reenforce same and to contrast with said body material and provide a distinctive edge for the board.

17. A plaster board comprising a plastic body material, cover sheets for facing the opposite sides of the plastic material, one of said sheets having margins overturned to engage the edges of the body material, and a plastic material contrasting in color with the body material compressed between said overturned margins and the adjacent cover sheet for reenforcing the edge of the board and making same distinctive.

REMARKS

Claims 1 to 3 have been cancelled.

Claim 4 has been amended to recite reenforcing means inserted between the overturned margins and the plastic body providing a contrasting color along the edges. Schumacher shows margins overturned to engage the edge of the body yet this reference does not show such means as providing a reenforcement together with a contrasting color along the edges. Brookby and Armstrong show open edge boards with strengthening plastic material along the edges. No reference is made to the novel idea of providing a colored strengthening means which is inserted between the overturned margins and the plastic body and which not only provides a superior edge but also provides a distinctive edge whereby the product of one manufacturer is readily distinguishable from that of others. It is felt that claim 4 now recites patentable subject matter. The trade marks cited in the last Office Action merely disclose colored edges and suggest nothing to anticipate applicant's novel reenforced edge which is recited as being of contrasting color in this claim.

Claims 7 and 15 have been amended properly to insert the matter attempted to be inserted in the last amendment. It is felt that the claims as now restricted are clearly patentable over the art along with the allowed claims.

New claims 16 and 17 have been modeled generally after some of the cancelled claims and are limited to Applicant's invention. It is thought that they now merit favorable consideration.

In view of the above reconsideration of the rejected claims is respectfully requested.

Responsive to amendment filed June 4, 1929.

Claims 4, 16 and 17 are finally rejected as defining no invention over Schumacher of record. The folded margins of Schumacher engage the edges of the body material and the plastic material under the overturned margins acts as a reinforcement. The use of a colored plastic under the margins has no structural utility as has been pointed out previously.

Claims 5 to 14, inclusive, are allowed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE
WASHINGTON July third 1930.

Alexander P. Speer, Assor. etg.

Your APPLICATION for a patent for an IMPROVEMENT in Plaster Board Manufacture filed Jan. 18, 1927 has been examined and ALLOWED with 11 claims.

The final fee, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, WITH $1 ADDITIONAL FOR EACH CLAIM ALLOWED IN EXCESS OF 20, must be paid not later than SIX MONTHS from the date of this present notice of allowance. If the final fee be not paid within that period, the patent will be withheld, but the application may be renewed within one year after the date of the original notice with a renewal fee of $25 and $1 additional for each claim in excess of 20.

The office delivers patents upon the day of their date, on which date their term begins to run. The preparation of the patent for final signing and sealing will require about four weeks, and such work will not be begun until after payment of the necessary final fee.

When the final fee is paid, there should also be sent, DISTINCTLY AND PLAINLY WRITTEN, the name of the INVENTOR, TITLE OF THE INVENTION, AND SERIAL NUMBER AS ABOVE GIVEN, DATE OF ALLOWANCE (which is the date of this circular), DATE OF FILING, and, if assigned, the NAMES OF THE ASSIGNEES.

If it is desired to have the patent issue to an ASSIGNEE OR ASSIGNEES, an assignment containing a REQUEST to that effect, together with the FEE for recording the same, must be filed in this office on or before the date of payment of the final fee.

After issue of the patent, uncertified copies of the drawings and specifications may be purchased at the price of TEN CENTS EACH. The money should accompany the order. Postage stamps will not be received.

The final fee will NOT be received from other than the applicant, his assignee or attorney, or a party in interest as shown by the records of the Patent Office.

NOTICE. WHEN THE NUMBER OF CLAIMS ALLOWED IS IN EXCESS OF 20, NO SUM LESS THAN $25 PLUS $1 ADDITIONAL FOR EACH CLAIM IN EXCESS OF TWENTY CAN BE ACCEPTED AS THE FINAL FEE.

Respectfully,

Thomas E. Robertson
Commissioner of Patents.

11582 Government's Exhibit No. 644

AGREEMENT

This agreement between Alexander S. Speer, of Buffalo, New York, hereinafter called "Speer", and the Certain-teed Products Corporation, a Maryland corporation, hereinafter called "Certain-teed", in consideration of the mutual covenants hereinafter contained, witnesseth, that

Whereas, Speer was the inventor of numerous patents which were ultimately acquired by the "Beaver" Companies, so called, under which patents exclusive licenses were later given to the Flintkote Company, a Massachusetts corporation, and

Whereas, the assets of the aforesaid "Beaver" Companies were acquired by Certain-teed, and

Whereas, certain obligations of said "Beaver" Companies were assumed by Certain-teed including the obligations to Speer, and in particular that Agreement dated June 3, 1920, between Alexander S. Speer and The Roofing Patents Company, a Delaware corporation, and The Beaver Board Companies, a Delaware corporation and

Whereas, in view of the many complications involved in the various Agreements and Assignments between Speer and the various "Beaver" Companies, and/or their subsidiaries, it has been decided to draw up this Agreement to take the place of all previous Agreements of Speer and the "Beaver" Companies relative to said patents, and

Whereas, Speer represents that under said Agreements and Assignments he was entitled to twenty-five per cent of the net royalties to be received by the "Beaver" Companies and/or their subsidiaries, and/or successors, and/or assigns,

Now therefore, it is agreed between the parties as follows:

(1) Speer hereby releases Certain-teed from all obligations to Speer under any Agreements whatsoever between Speer and the former "Beaver" Companies and/or their subsidiaries or affiliated Companies, except that Certain-teed is still obligated to pay the guaranteed salary up to 1935, as previously provided for under said Agreement dated June 3, 1920, as follows:

"The Beaver Company hereby guarantees the payment to Speer or his legal representatives or beneficiaries of the above mentioned sums of fifteen thousand (15,000) Dollars per year for ten (10) years from February 2nd, 1920 and ten thousand (10,000) dollars per year for the five years thereafter."

In the event that Speer shall die before the expiration of the five year period from February 1, 1930, Certain-teed shall pay the amounts equivalent to said salary to his legal representatives or to the beneficiary or beneficiaries who may become entitled through intestacy or under his Last Will and Testament to the rights of Speer under this Agreement, said payments to be made against the one-11583 fourth interest of Speer, hereinafter set forth, payable by Certain-teed; and said payments shall be made until Certain-teed may have exercised its option, as hereinafter provided, to terminate this Agreement.

(2) Certain-teed hereby agrees to pay Speer one-fourth of all net royalties received by it as the result of any patents, or applications therefor which it may now, or hereafter, own, or have any interest in as the result of the inventions of Speer. It is understood that "net royalties" means the net amount received by Certain-teed after deduction has been made for all expenses incurred by Certain-teed in connection with said patents, including litigation, purchase of other patents to be used in conjunction with the Speer patents, the amounts paid as royalties by Certain-teed under the Speer patents in conjunction with other patents, and all other expenses incurred by Certain-teed relating to the Speer patents.

(3) All royalties paid to Speer under the guaranteed salary covered in clause (1), shall be deducted from the one-fourth interest of Speer in the net royalties payable according to clause (2) hereof.

(4) This Agreement shall take effect as of February 1, 1930, and said one-fourth of all net royalties (minus the monthly guaranteed salary) shall be payable monthly to Speer up to and including the month of January, 1931. Thereafter, such payments shall be made quarterly to Speer. It is understood, however, that in no period shall Speer receive less than his guaranteed salary unless aggregate payments made have exceeded the amount due hereunder.

(5) Speer agrees that the major portion of his time, energy and skill, shall be devoted exclusively to Certain-teed, and further covenants that all discoveries, inventions and improvements that may be discovered by him during this said employment and relating to any enterprise which may then be conducted or which may at any later time be conducted or contemplated by Certain-teed, or by any of its subsidiaries, shall belong to Certain-teed, and Speer agrees that he will immediately disclose all such discoveries, inventions and improvements, and upon request assign the same to Certain-teed, its successors, assigns, or nominees, and will, upon the request of Certain-teed, take all other further action as may be necessary in the interest of Certain-teed.

In the event that, subsequent to the five year period from February 1, 1930, the one-fourth interest of Speer in the net royalties received by Certain-teed should amount to less than $10,000 per year, Speer and Certain-teed shall mutually agree as to what proportion of Speer's time shall be devoted to the service of Certain-teed.

(6) If Certain-teed does not desire to acquire any certain patent or patents, and/or applications therefor, of Speer, Speer shall have full title to said patent or patents, and/or applications therefor.

(7) Speer hereby gives and grants unto Certain-teed an option to terminate this Agreement, and to be relieved of all obligations thereunder, for the sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($150,000), such option to be exercisable, however, only against the legal representatives, heirs, or beneficiaries of Speer at any time after his death.

(8) Speer hereby authorizes Certain-teed to exercise its best discretion relative to obtaining the best returns under all patents contemplated by this Agreement, 11584 and hereby ratifies all acts of Certain-teed now consummated or hereafter to be consummated; and Certain-teed hereby agrees to exercise, in good faith, its best judgment to that effect.

(9) Speer hereby acknowledges payment in full of all payments to which he was entitled up to and including January 31, 1930.

(10) This Agreement shall extend to the expiration of the latest Speer patent acquired, or to be acquired, by Certain-teed.

In Witness Whereof, the parties have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals this 4th day of June, 1930.

DEAR MR. DIEGEL:—

Winslow phoned this morning for another 5,000 square feet of foil lath.

As I understand it, this is for an account in New England who ordered a full car of gypsum products, including the foil lath, and it might jeopardize the balance of the car if we delayed on the lath.

I, therefore, told Winslow we would truck it over at once but would have to bill it at the dealer price the same as the last lot on account of the license provisions. Can't you get ahold of Mr. Ebsary and have him sign this license right away? Mr. Baker wants to work cooperatively with Mr. Ebsary on this so you will not be penalized when one of your customers wants foil included in the car but, as explained to you, we can't extend the 12½% discount until Mr. Ebsary signs the foil license. If there is any question about Mr. Ebsary signing this, I suggest he phone Mr. Baker at once so we can get straightened away promptly.

Kindest regards to you and George.

If you have signed the foil license and see no objection, I would like to write U. S. G. now for permission to put above discounts in effect with you. Please advise me.

Earl North

Earl North who represents Oakfield Gypsum Products Company, 728 Broad Street, Utica, N. Y. advises they have been buying the bulk of their wallboard from Universal although they also buy some from Steve Kelley.

Inasmuch as Oakfield Gypsum Products are not manufacturers of wallboard and, therefore, not licensees, they don't receive the price bulletins from the United States Gypsum Company but rely on their source of supply relaying these bulletins to them.

Earl just advised me that no one advised him of the extention of the trucking area from Western New York mills into Pennsylvania.

Will you please set up copies of all price bulletins on patented board and see that copies are passed to Mr. North and also Oakfield Gypsum Products at Utica on anything that affects their eastern operation?

I also told Mr. North that we would sell them foil board but they would first have to sign the license agreement with United States Gypsum Company on foil. I don't know the exact mechanics of this and would appreciate your discussing this angle with me. In the meantime, will you mail Earl North a copy of our pricing bulletin on foil board?

F. G. Krumholz
(Chicago Office)

Note attached correspondence with Texas Cement Plaster Company. They want to buy Foil Lath and Foil Wallboard from us and possibly Tile Board and Grain Board.

As I understand it, they have never signed the gypsum wallboard license agreement and yet I think U. S. G. is anxious to put them in a position to get these specialties on the usual basis rather than antagonize them in the market. Would you see what U. S. G's attitude is on this—are they already selling them—if so, on what basis—and, would they give us permission to sell them? I believe this is required under the license agreement.

On foil there is a separate license agreement and when we took up with U. S. G. some time ago the matter of our selling foil board to Ebsary, they took the position that Ebsary had to sign the foil license agreement before we could sell them at a discount. Ebsary tell me they have now signed the foil agreement.

While you are talking to Charlie Henning you might ask him to let you know about this.

As far as Texas Cement Plaster is concerned, based on their past attitude, I question if they would sign any kind of a license agreement but I still think it would be smart to let them buy the little foil board they want and we would like to have U. S. G's permission to sell them on the usual 12½% and 15% discount.

In the attached letter, you will note I have added the freight from Sweetwater to Texas Cement Plaster Company's mill. I don't believe that this is necessary and that we should sell them at $30.00 F.O.B. their mill. Would you clarify this as well and get the data back to me as quickly as possible?

GENTLEMEN:—

The Certain-teed Company recently shipped the above patented wallboard in a car containing 30,000 lbs. of gypsum products and 10,000 lbs. fibre insulation wallboard to make a minimum car of 40,000 lbs.

Our interpretation of the various bulletins covering the terms and conditions under which patented wallboard may be sold is that the minimum car weight must be made up of gypsum and lime products. Our feeling is that the introduction of new products such as insulation board to make the minimum weight would have a tendency to give an undue and unfair advantage to various shippers.

Please advise us definitely on this.

It appears from our files that although we have written you twice in regard to the reported sale to Geo. L. Switzer Company, Litchfield, Connecticut by the licensee, the Certain-teed Products Company, at less than the licensor's minimum price to you for such sale of patented board we have overlooked answering your letter of July 12 as to whether or not the practice of including insulation board to make up the minimum weight of gypsum products in a car is or is not in violation of the terms and conditions of your license contract.

Insulation board cannot be used to make up weight in a car of gypsum products where patented board is included. The licensor would construe such a practice as being in violation of your license contract.

Re: James Lumber Company
Racine, Wis.

DEAR SIR:—

Referring to the terms and conditions under which we sell patented wallboard, we feel an audit should be made of Certain-teed's sale of patented board to the above account.

As indicated when you received our entire file on this account in Buffalo, we made allowance in good faith of $30.00 on the first car we shipped them being supported with our mill Superintendent's report that our board shipped at that time was not in good condition.

When this dealer deducted $30.00 on the second car in the Fall of 1931 we refused to make allowance and forced collection of the money. Dealer claimed at that time that Certain-teed would cut the price via the roofing route or with allowance or damaged board. Since forcing collection of their deduction we have not been able to sell James Lumber Co. patented board and they now have Certain-teed board in stock.

Under the circumstances we feel an audit should be made of the Certain-teed sales to this account to determine if roofing or allowances on damaged board have been in violation of the terms and conditions under which patented board can be sold.

Acknowledging receipt of your letter of September 26 regarding the alleged sale of patented board in conjunction with roofing materials by the licensee, Certain-teed Products Corporation to the Hyde Park Lumber Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, said sale being made in such a manner as to reflect a lower price on patented board through the medium of a rebate on their roofing purchases.

We appreciate your forwarding this information, and will immediately investigate.

GENTLEMEN:—

Referring to the terms and conditions under which we sell patented wallboard, we have reason to believe that the Certain-teed Company give the above account special terms on roofing which in effect amounts to a rebate on their purchases of patented board. Mr. Gallagher of the United States Gypsum Company is in touch with this situation as well.

We feel an audit should be made of the Certain-teed's dealings with the above concern to determine the exact status of their roofing sales to the above account.

GENTLEMEN:—

Referring to terms and conditions under which we sell patented board, the above account who have been buying Gold Bond Board for years recently bought Certain-teed board under Certain-teed's Roofing Contract whereby at the end of twelve months rebate is given on roofing in line with purchases, the understanding being that at the same time rebate will be given on the plaster wallboard purchased during the same period—either directly or in the form of extra discounts on the roofing. We are quite positive the above is in effect.

Re: Furstenberg Lumber Co.

GENTLEMEN:—

Referring to terms and conditions under which we sell patented board, we received the following note from our representative dated June 18th.

"It may be just a coincidence, it may be fate or what have you, but our Certain-teed friends have just gone in and sold the above account their first stock of Certain-teed lath.

At the same time Furstenberg suddenly decorates his buildings with Certain-teed roofing signs and goes out after the roofing business of the town."

On July 6th we received further report as follows—

"The Furstenburg car contained 3 tons of plaster that Furstenberg did not order. He never has used plaster but he now has this batch in his warehouse.

We are following Furstenberg now to see if they have been billed and credited on the plaster or what the final outcome will be.

Furstenberg bought lath and roofing but no board. More later."

We feel a check-up should be made at once to determine what items were included in the car recently shipped 11602 to them by Certain-teed. If Certain-teed records show no plaster shipped them, we suggest it would be in order to send a special investigator to Saginaw to see if Furstenberg has Certain-teed plaster in stock as the situation now indicates that Certain-teed are in effect giving them prices on patented board under the minimum set by the licensor.

GENTLEMEN:—

In reply to your letter of December 28th, the present policies set up under the license contract have developed one practice which we feel could be given study with the idea that some more practical plan could be devised.

That is, the practice that permits any dealer to buy in pool cars in lots of 500 feet to 150C feet at the carload price.

We find that many dealers buy extremely small quantities, reordering every few weeks with a penalty to the manufacturer who has to take care of such deliveries.

If a minimum quantity of 5,000 square feet could be set or a mixed order of 5 tons, we do not feel that the industry would be penalized and a better scheme of distribution would prevail.

We also feel that the purchaser of less than a full car should pay as an illustration 50¢ per M up—particularly where stop-over charges are absorbed. If some equitable plan could be worked out along this line, the manufacturer could afford to absorb stop-over charges everywhere, switching charges, demurrage items, etc. all of which represent, we feel, the bulk of the minor disputes with the trade, the bulk of the minor violations of the code and the bulk of the small irritating details that now prevail under the present marketing policies on patented board.

Yours very truly,

Attention: Mr. E. W. Carey

GENTLEMEN:

It is reported to us that on Patented Gypsum Board shipped by the United States Gypsum Company on November 6, 1935 and invoiced on November 7, 1935—3/8" Patented Gypsum Wallboard was invoiced at $28.78 per M sq. ft. f.o.b. Fort Sumner, New Mexico, to which point the lowest published freight rate from a base mill is 38½¢ per cwt. That freight rate would make a delivered price of $30.74 per M sq. ft.

It is also reported that included in the same car was some plaster priced at $16.40 per ton as against the correct delivered price of $16.80 per ton based on the manufacturers published price of $11.00 f.o.b. mill and a freight rate of .27 per cwt. plus emergency charge. This reduction in the price of plaster is in effect a cut price on the mixed car and therefore influences the sale of patented gypsum board.

This is in effect a violation of the license agreement in that the licensor does not adhere to his own published prices. Will you please check into the situation and let us have your comments?

NATIONAL GYPSUM CO.,
Buffalo, N. Y.

Atten:—Mr. M. H. Baker.

DEAR MR. BAKER:—

We received a letter from Mr. Van Hagan after his conversation with you, stating that you wished prices on materials other than those mentioned in the contract. Naturally, there are different conditions surrounding each one of these items and the tonnage of none of these items is to be included with the tonnage of Fibred Plaster and Stucco to get into the various price brackets, and all prices quoted in this letter are net the tenth of the following month, the same as in the contract.

We are giving you below the cost price to you, f.o.b. Fort Dodge and our established selling prices, f.o.b. Fort Dodge:

	Price to you F.O.B. Ft. Dodge	C. P. C. Established Sell. Price, f.o.b. Ft. Dodge
Land Plaster	$ 3.75	$ 6.00
Concrete Bond Plaster	8.75	12.50
Sand Float Finish	12.75	16.00
Prepared Trowel Finish	17.75	21.00
Keene's Cement	21.00	21.75
White Finish	13.75	17.25
White Moulding	14.75	17.25
2" Solid Blocks	.04-1/4	.04-1/2
6" Hollow Blocks	.08-3/4	.09

All prices quoted in this letter are subject to change if the general market price in the territory supplied by the Fort Dodge Plant changes, but in no case shall prices be lower than those quoted except by mutual consent.

On the above materials you are to supply bags, f.o.b. our Fort Dodge Plant, without cost to us, for Land Plaster, Concrete Bond Plaster, Sand Float Finish and Prepared Trowel Finish.

On Keene's Cement we will supply the material in Best Brothers' bags, and the price of $21.00 includes the bags.

On the White Finish and White Moulding, the prices at Fort Dodge are based on prices of $8.00 for White Finish and $9.00 for White Moulding, f.o.b. Blue Rapids, plus warehousing and Freight to Fort Dodge. You are now supplying the bags to Blue Rapids and we will ship sufficient quantities of this material in cars of our own materials going from Blue Rapids to Fort Dodge and will warehouse this material at Fort Dodge for you for mixed car service.

The 2" Solid and the 6" Hollow Blocks will, of 11607 course, carry our brand, the same as the other sizes.

We have not made you any price on Crushed Gypsum Rock because this is a material going to the Portland Cement trade only, and as the selling price is exceedingly low there would seem to be no reason for your organization to attempt to sell any of this material as we could not sell it to you for any less than we charge the Portland Cement plants, which is $1.60 per ton, f.o.b. Fort Dodge.

On all materials, like Hydrated Lime or any other similar materials, that you wanted to ship to the Fort Dodge Plant to be warehoused by us and shipped out in mixed cars, we will handle such materials at your risk for $1.25 per ton, which will include the unloading of material received, the storage and the shipping in mixed cars.

On the Keene's Cement, you will note that the price to you is only 75¢ less per ton than our selling price, but you realize that we are purchasers of this material and consequently if we are to get out even on it we can't allow you any greater margin of profit.

We trust the above arrangement will be entirely satisfactory to you, and if you will sign one copy of this letter and return to us, it can be attached to the original contract and made a part thereof.

Yours very truly,

AUDENRIED WHITTEMORE
Vice President.

Atten:—Mr. M. H. Baker.

DEAR MR. BAKER:—

We are attaching signed copy of the contract and have dated same today, December 17th.

We have also asked Mr. Van Hagan to proceed immediately with instructions to our Billing Department and the plant so that you can start sending in your orders as soon as arrangements can be made for the necessary sacks, labels, etc.

We have made one change in the contract, merely to clarify the understanding which was undoubtedly clear to you but might not be clear to any one else reading the contract. We have added to the last paragraph of Article 2, the following:

"National agrees to stand the expense of handling and adjusting all complaints" and we are assuming that as this was the understanding, there would be no objection to adding it to the contract.

There is another thing that we wish to call to your attention, which is that it is clearly understood that if for any reason we desire to shut down the Ft. Dodge Plant, we will have no obligation to ship additional orders for you after notification to you that the plant would be shut down. We have no thought that we will shut it down and we know that if we did shut it down you would not expect us to operate it simply to ship orders for you, but we want this matter clearly understood.

In view of these two points, your signature on the duplicate copy of this letter, and return to us, will be sufficient without changing the contract further.

We feel sure that this contract will work out to our mutual advantage, and we are in hopes that the tonnage you order from the Fort Dodge Plant will be sufficient to enable us to bill you at the minimum price.

Yours very truly,

AUDENRIED WHITTEMORE
Vice President.

11609 Government's Exhibit No. 714-B

This Agreement, made in duplicate this 17th day of December, 1930, by and between Certain-Teed Products Corporation, a Maryland corporation, party of the first part, having its principal office at New York, New York, hereinafter referred to as Certain-teed, and National Gypsum Company, a Delaware corporation, party of the second part, having its principal office at Buffalo, New York, hereinafter referred to as National.

Witnesseth: That

Whereas, National desires to purchase from Certain-teed certain Gypsum products now manufactured by Certain-teed at its Fort Dodge, Iowa Plant; and

Whereas, Certain-teed is willing to sell certain gypsum products to National as is herein provided;

Now, Therefore, the said parties, hereto, in consideration of the foregoing and of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, and the performance thereof by the respective parties, do hereby covenant and agree as follows:

1. Certain-teed will sell to National and National will purchase from Certain-teed such quantities of Cement Plaster, Wood Fibered Plaster, Common Finish, Stucco, Plasterboard and Plaster Lath as National may from time to time determine as evidenced by written orders from National to Certain-teed. All products ordered by National and sold by Certain-teed to National will be the same grade of products as now manufactured at the Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed.

The prices to be paid by National shall all be f.o.b. cars Certain-teed's Plant Fort Dodge, Iowa, and shall be as follows:

(a) Cement Plaster, Wood Fibered Plaster and Common Finish, (not including bags):—If 5,000 tons per annum are purchased by National, the price will be $4.01 per ton. If less than 5,000 tons are purchased, actual standard cost will be charged but not less than $4.01 nor more than $4.27. If 10,000 tons per annum are purchased, the price on the entire amount will be $3.84 per ton. If more than 5,000 tons but less than 10,000 tons are purchased, actual standard cost will be charged for the entire amount, but not less than $3.84 nor more than $4.01 per ton. If 15,000 tons per annum are purchased, the price on the entire amount will be $7.73 per ton. If more than 10,000 tons but less than 15,000 tons are purchased, actual standard cost will be charged for the entire amount, but not less than $3.73 nor more than $3.84 per ton.

Stucco (not including bags) will be 33¢ per ton less than the above prices.

The total tonnage of the four above items will be used as a basis for the determination of the prices for various quantities, as outlined above.

(b) 3/8" Plaster Lath:—$13.50 per M. sq. ft., Certain-teed to pay the royalty.

3/8" Gypsum Wall Board:—$16.96 per M. sq. ft., Certain-teed to pay the royalty.

(c) 3" Hollow Gypsum Blocks:—3.75 Cents per Square foot.

4" Hollow Gypsum Blocks:—4.25 Cents per Square foot.

11610 If National desires to purchase other materials from time to time, the prices for such other materials will be quoted by Certain-teed to National.

The prices on Cement Plaster, Wood Fibered Plaster, Common Finish and Stucco shall remain in effect from date until December 31, 1931.

The prices on Plaster Board and Plaster Lath shall be subject to change if the licensor changes prices on these products, but in no case shall the prices on Board and Lath be lower than those quoted, except by mutual consent.

The price of Gypsum Blocks shall be subject to change if the general market price in the territory supplied by the Fort Dodge Plant changes, but in no case shall the prices on Blocks be lower than those quoted, except by mutual consent.

2. Certain-teed will bill to National each month for all goods shipped on National's order during the preceding month at the prices herein given. All invoices covering the calendar month will be due and payable net without discount on the tenth of the month following.

As the tonnage of Cement Plaster, Wood Fibered Plaster, Common Finish and Stucco purchased will determine the prices charged, until 5,000 tons have been purchased Certain-teed will bill to National and National will pay to Certain-teed monthly for all shipments made during the preceding month at the following prices:

Cement Plaster, Wood Fibered Plaster and Common Finish	$4.27 per ton
Stucco	3.94 " "

As soon as Certain-teed's shipments for National have reached 5,000 tons, Certain-teed will pay to National in cash an amount necessary to reduce the price paid by National to the prices named for 5,000 tons, and additional shipments will be billed at the 5,000 ton prices. As soon as Certain-teed's shipments for National have reached 10,000 tons, Certain-teed will pay to National in cash an amount necessary to bring the price paid by National to the prices named for 10,000 tons and additional shipments will be billed at the 10,000 ton prices. As soon as Certain-teed's shipments for National have reached 15,000 tons, Certain-teed will pay to National in cash an amount necessary to bring the price paid by National to the prices named for 15,000 tons and additional shipments will be billed at the 15,000 ton price. It is agreed that no price, billing change or cash adjustment will be made except at the beginning of the month following the month in which quantity shipped by Certain-teed warrants such price and billing changes, and the cash payment by Certain-teed to National to adjust prices shall be made by the tenth of the month on the first of which such a price and billing change occurs; provided, however, all invoices rendered National by Certain-teed which are due have been paid.

National agrees to handle all complaints and adjustments of every kind or character whether or not Certain-teed may be at fault in the quality of product furnished, but Certain-teed agrees to furnish materials of the same grade and quality on National's orders that it supplied to its own customers. National agrees to stand the expense of handling and adjusting all complaints.

3. National will supply at their own expense all paper bags for packing the products purchased, f.o.b. Fort Dodge plant of Certain-teed, and printed with National's brands. Such bags are to be of the same size, type and quality as is or shall be regularly used by Certain-teed.

11611 If National desires Certain-teed to purchase paper bags for National, Certain-teed will do so, charging National the actual cost for such bags purchased. Any bags so purchased by Certain-teed will be paid for by National immediately on receipt of invoice covering the purchase.

Certain-teed assumes no liability for damage by causes beyond their control for any materials owned by National but stored in the Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed.

4. Wall Board and Lath supplied by Certain-teed to National shall be of the same appearance and quality as Certain-teed's product but shall be labeled with National's labels to be supplied by National, f.o.b. Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed, without charge. Gypsum Blocks shall be supplied with the Certain-teed's regular brand.

5. All orders given by National to Certain-teed shall be given the same consideration in handling and shipping as is given to orders of Certain-teed, and Certain-teed agrees that sales data, customers' names, prices, etc., on National's business will not be compiled and turned over to the Sales Department of Certain-teed.

6. Failure on the part of National promptly to pay any bills rendered by Certain-teed to National for goods sold to National hereunder when the same are due and payable shall be sufficient to authorize Certain-teed to withhold any and all further shipments or deliveries to National or on National's account, and if any such bills are not paid within a period of thirty (30) days after the same are due and payable, then Certain-teed shall have the right, at its option, to terminate this agreement, with or without notice to National, provided that any such termination shall be without prejudice to any claim of either party against the other arising out of any breach of or failure to perform this agreement occurring prior to such termination.

7. In case National desires any products furnished in jute bags instead of paper, National will supply such jute bags, f.o.b. Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed, and the prices for the products shall be the same as if packed in paper. In case any jute bags are returned to the Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed, such bags shall be returned free of cost to Certain-teed and the actual cost for cleaning, repairing and putting these bags in serviceable condition will be charged to National by Certain-teed. Certain-teed will also render National a statement showing the number of bags returned, the number of bags requiring repairs and the number of bags unfit for further use. Any bags unfit for further use shall be disposed of as promptly as possible by National.

8. In order to facilitate prompt handling of orders for National by Certain-teed, it is mutually agreed that National can send shipping instructions on memo. shipping order direct to the Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed, but all such memo. orders shall be considered in exactly the same way as if regular written orders had been sent, and such memo. orders shall be promptly confirmed by regular orders. All such confirming orders shall be clearly marked with a red stamp "Confirmation" to prevent errors in duplications of shipments already made on memo. orders.

9. It is understood and agreed that the prices named on the various products covered in this contract are for products manufactured at the Fort Dodge, Iowa Plant of Certain-teed. It is specially agreed, therefore, that in the event that, on account of fires, floods, strikes, labor troubles or for any other reason, whether of like kind to those specified or of a wholly different character, not due to the willfull neglect of Certain-teed, the Fort Dodge Plant of Certain-teed shall cease, either temporarily or permanently, to manufacture such products, Cer-11612 tain-teed will promptly notify National thereof and no liability of any kind or character will attach to Certain-teed for failure to fill orders by National and in such event National will have the right to immediately cancel this contract, provided that it be without prejudice to any claim of either party against the other arising out of any breach of or failure to perform this agreement occurring prior to such termination.

10. This contract, unless cancelled as provided for herein, shall remain in full force and effect from date hereof to December 31, 1931.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have caused these presents to be signed in their respective corporate names by their respective Presidents, and their corporate seals to be affixed and attested by their respective Secretaries, the day and year first above written.

I had the impression that if we made a thorough check in on this that some of the other factors in the industry would be influenced by our decision, If we decided to go into the system. In fact, this was my reason for being aggressive in the matter.

I understand that the subject will come up at the meeting the 26th, at which time we may get some further impressions and if after that meeting you feel so inclined, you might pass word on that we complete our investigation.

In connection with your letter of October 26th I regret our inability to respond to the suggestions made to me while in Chicago some time ago. I have discussed this subject with several of our people, also with Mr. Finck, but we have not been able to develop any practical ideas for strengthening the license agreement.

If you have developed any concrete ideas for strengthening the licensee agreement which you believe will be acceptable to all the licensees, I would appreciate it very much if you would send me a copy of your plan and I will then have an opportunity to turn it over in my mind and discuss it with our Directors so that I will be able to discuss it further with you at an early date.

In order to protect its rights as owner of the patents involved in your license contract authorizing you to manufacture and sell gypsum wallboard and gypsum plasterboard embodying the claims and inventions of the licensor's patents, the licensor has been giving consideration to the matter of license violations through the sale of patented board at less than the established minimum price effected by means of advertising allowances, painting dealers' signs, donations of carpenters' aprons or the sale of such below cost, and concessions of a like nature.

We would appreciate a statement of your policies in this regard to assist the licensor in its further study of this problem.

Thanks for your telegram of May 20. I regret very much that you cannot be with us at the meeting to be held tomorrow although it does not seem to me that the situation makes it necessary. For the past several months, most of those manufacturing boards and infringing our patents have indicated a readiness to pay damages and to take out a license. The American Gypsum Company, however, have been unwilling to subscribe to the terms, the conditions in our opinion require. Mr. Brown, Mr. Reeb, Mr. Ebsary and the National Company have expressed themselves favorable to this adjustment and it is not improbable that the matter may be closed at the meeting tomorrow or soon thereafter. Recently E. A. Gailagher made the following report:

"Watertown Builders, Watertown, Massachusetts state as long as we insist on bulletin price for plaster, it was not to their advantage to buy our plasterboard. They buy Certain-teed materials, and are selling plasterboard f.o.b. job below our price on plasterboard to the dealer. It is apparent that Certain-teed is selling this firm plaster at less than its regular price so as to influence patented plasterboard business."

DEAR MR. MILLER:

Acknowledging your inquiry of May 13 addressed to our Mr. C. O. Brown regarding alleged sale of patented gypsum wall board and/or lath to subject concern.

It is probably true that the dealer may have made statement "for the reason of the rebates Certain-teed makes on our sale of paint and roofing" as we are cooperating with this account covering roofing and paint in exactly the same way we cooperate with any other account handling our line of paint and roofing materials, in that our salesmen endeavor to cover the contractor trade to work up prospects for our dealer, and insofar as rebates made on other commodities is concerned, we have made no adjustments other than our regular policy would provide on materials of this nature which were found to be defective.

As mentioned in the writer's letter to you of March 13th, we have made no adjustments or allowances covering paint or roofing other than were absolutely justified, and in no way do such allowances affect their purchase of patented gypsum board and/or lath.

"Says he is wholesale and retail and that he sells more material to dealers than to jobs. Claims he handled 30 cars of Gypsum-Board last year and seven cars so far this year. Claims to be handling Certain-teed. I went through his warehouse and found mostly Bestwall and unlabeled board that looked like Bestwall. Also some Gypsolite and some Rockwall Finisher. Tried to get something definite from him. The best I could get was that he sells it to other dealers out of the car for from $29.00 to $31.00—that speaks for itself, and if Holloway can get some dealer to buy it at that price we have something to go on."

DEAR SIR:

Acknowledging your inquiry of July 19 to our Mr. C. O. Brown reference alleged sale of patented gypsum board and/or lath to subject concern.

The information you have received is 100% incorrect. Early this year we were maintaining a firm price of $17.20 on "white goods". Competition compelled us to reduce our price to $15.00 and we therefore credited subject concern with our January invoicing to the extent of $2.20 per ton. The latter part of March and early in April we found that our competitors had again reduced price of basis of $12.00, and we again credited subject concern for April deliveries, not, however, down to $12.00, but to a basis of $13.50. Our April shipments had been invoiced at $15.00, and as mentioned we rebated them on the basis of $13.50 cost.

There is absolutely no connection between this competitive situation and our sale of gypsum board and lath to subject concern.

Under date of August 6, our salesman reported that the licensee, National Gypsum Company, donated enough Colortex to redecorate the office of the Fisher Lumber Company, Vermilion, Ohio. As a result of this donation secured a ½ carload order of patented wallboard and lath.

Will you please handle with the licensee, National Gypsum Company?

DEAR MR. MILLER:

This will acknowledge your letter of August 10th in reference to a donation of Color Texture affecting the sale of patented board to Fisher Lumber Co., Vermilion, Ohio. Each and every shipment made this concern, according to our records, has been paid in full with no credit allowances of any nature.

On May 16th we shipped them 25 lbs. of Color Texture and settlement was received for this shipment by check June 13th. On June 13th we shipped them another 10 lbs. and check was received to cover that shipment June 17th. On June 20th we shipped them 200 lbs. which was paid for in full by check July 1st.

All of the above was invoiced at our regular prices of 10¢ per lb. on 25 lb. cases and 10½¢ per lb. on 10 lb. cases.

Very truly yours

DEAR MR. BURLEY:

We are informed that your company has recently sold in carload lots wallboard and/ plasterboard embodying the claims and inventions of the patents under which you are licensed to J. T. Justice Lumber Company, Louisa, Kentucky at prices below the licensor's minimum price to you and consequently in violation of the terms and conditions of your license agreement.

We desire a verified statement from you fully reporting your sales of such wallboard and/or plasterboard to the J. T. Justice Lumber Company, Louisa, Kentucky within the last six months showing date of sale, amount of board sold, price at which board was invoiced, and price actually paid by the dealer for such board, including any and all allowances then or subsequently made effecting such shipment.

This request is occasioned by a complaint from one of the licensees that you did sell wallboard to the above concern at $2.00 per thousand under the delivered price for Louisa, Kentucky, also, that on your last shipment special allowances were made on your other products sold to this firm in such a way as to reflect a lower minimum price to it on its purchases of patented board from you.

Re: Axinn Lumber Company

GENTLEMEN:—

In reply to your letter of December 20th, all sales of patentee board to the above account were made at licensor's published price for patented board.

We sold them one car of insulation board October 17th at our published price for insulation board. After shipment was received Axinn found, due to the interested activities of one of our discharged salesmen, that we had previously shipped insulation at a lower price to some other lumber dealer on the Island and Axinn is now insisting on the lower insulation board price. So far we have not made any adjustment.

There was no connection between the sale of insulation board and patented plaster board.

Under date of April 12, 1933 we have the following report from Mr. Jenkins, President of the Samson Plasterboard Company.

> "Reports we have indicate this dealer is now handling National Products and gave as his reason, our refusal to ship Insulating Board seconds. Deutsch no doubt was able to get Maftex Insulating Board in carload lots at less than $30.00 and this fact took the Gypsum Board and plaster business with it for National. Deutsch would not state what price he paid for Maftex but the fact that other dealers in that vicinity claim that they can go to Michael Deutsch's warehouse and pick up Maftex in any quantity at $30.00 indicates that he has a lower price on Insulation from National than our carload price, as he would hardly unload the material into his warehouse, store it and reload it on the dealers' trucks as they want it and invoice at the price he pays."

DEAR SIR:—

Re: Michael Deutsch
Woodbridge, N. Y.

Concerning the above mentioned inquiry which contends that we have used Insulation Board to influence the sale of patented gypsum board, I find that we have sold this dealer some of our products since 1931. We first sold him patented board in January 1932 and shipped him patented board as late as November 1932. We have, however, not shipped him any since then.

We made no Insulation Board sales to this dealer until the latter part of January 1933. There was a complaint on the quality of this Insulation Board and a credit allowed accordingly but the file indicates that the allowance was entirely on the merits of the Insulation Board case itself.

Furthermore, as we have not sold patented gypsum board since making the sale of Insulation Board, that can hardly have influenced any patented board sales so further detail on the Insulation Board incident will hardly be of interest on this inquiry.

Re: McCluskey Lumber Company

Referring to your letter of July 31st, we did, on March 6th, give a small quantity of our Color Texture to McCluskey Lumber Company for demonstration of that material thru its use on some ceilings in their display offices.

We also sold them some Insulation Board Seconds. You understand, of course, that we do not manufacture our Insulation Board, having the exclusive sale of another manufacturer's out-put. The Insulation Board was shipped out of the regular run of Seconds laid aside by this other manufacturer and so billed to us—we in turn billing the customer accordingly.

As far as either the Color Texture or the Insulation Board are concerned, we fail to see how they have any bearing on our sales of patented board as we have been selling the account regularly for at least the past four years.

We have a report that the National Gypsum Company have, through the means of lower prices on other items, such as insulation board and fiber board, influenced the patented gypsum board business of this account. They were formerly our dealer, and the National Gypsum Company have been able to sell them as a result of the concessions which have been made to jobbing arrangements on other items. We believe this definitely reflects a lower price on patented gypsum board, and that the matter should be promptly investigated.

DEAR MR. HENLEY:

Re: Joseph Lumber Company,
Chicago, Illinois.

Referring to your license contract covering the manufacture and sale of patented gypsum board, it has been reported to us that you are granting concessions to the Joseph Lumber Company, Chicago, Illinois, which have the effect of selling patented gypsum board below the minimum prices established by the licensor.

The complainant alleges that your company has painted a sign on the Kimball Avenue fence of the customer approximately 65′ x 7′ which reads in its entirety "Bestwall", "The Original Twin Mounted Wallboard". It is further stated that your company paid the Joseph Lumber Company $120.00 to defray the expense of this painting.

The complainant contends that this allowance on your part has operated as a reduction of the minimum prices established by the licensor, and has resulted in the loss of business to the licensee involved.

We request an investigation of this case, and will appreciate a report from you covering the findings in this regard.

Acknowledging your inquiry of May 21 in respect to painting of sign in connection with subject concern's yard.

Investigation develops that through misunderstanding our Sales Department authorized this expenditure to the extent of $100.00 and in so doing misinterpreted our advertising policy, copy of which we understand you have received.

There was no intent to influence sale of gypsum board or any other commodity, and the writer is further advised that our local manager approved this expenditure feeling that in so doing he was within his rights as painting of sign was replacing a similar sign advertising U. DEAR MR. HENLEY:

In connection with your license contract covering the manufacture and sale of patented gypsum board, a complaint has been filed which alleges that you have granted a concession to the Keefner Concrete Company of Des Moines, Iowa, which has the effect of selling patented gypsum board below the minimum prices established by the licensor.

The report states that you recently painted a sign approximately 8′ x 8′, illuminated, in front of the dealer's office on S. W. 9th Street, Des Moines, Iowa, which refers exclusively to your products.

The complainant takes the position that your allowance for the cost of this sign has placed said complainant at a disadvantage in the sale of patented board and is, in effect, a reduction in the minimum prices established under your license.

Will you kindly investigate this case and give us a prompt report.

As I have advised you before, our Sales Organization misinterpreted Merchandising Plan in respect to painting of signs and in so doing assumed the entire expense therefor.

There was no intention on our part to violate in any way our license agreement and as above mentioned cost of painting sign was through misinterpretation of our Merchandising Policy.

LICENSEE'S EXPLANATION

Answering your inquiry of July 16 reference signboard advertising for subject concern:

This to advise that we have been selling this account (exclusive) their Gypsum Wallboard and Lath since August 30, 1935 and it was not until February of 1936 that subject concern advised us that they were erecting several billboards and would be interested in advertising our Gypsum Products, provided we would share 50% of the cost of erecting same.

The matter was taken up with our Advertising Dept. and in accordance with our regular policy we arranged to participate in the cost of painting the two billboards, to the extent of $60.00 each. This transaction was completed on February 28, 1936, and after billboards were erected payment was made direct to the Smoot Advertising Company of Parkersburg, W. Va.—this on May 13, 1936, to the extent of $120.00 (for two signs only) covering the painting expense only.

You will note from the above that your statement that we arranged for signboard advertising late in 1935 is incorrect and further that we sold this account in August, 1935, and the discussion relative to signboards did not occur for some six months later.

Reply to your letter of July 29th has been delayed awaiting the return of our credit manager from vacation.

On May 11th, we shipped a straight car of patented board and Filler to the subject customer for a total invoice price of $680.72. There was no indication when the order was received at the office that any portion of it was to be paid for by certificates of deposit in any closed bank.

On May 25th, remittance was received in full for this invoice, all in cash except for $162.34, representing credit by certificates of deposit on the Harter Bank as mentioned in your letter. Before these were accepted, our Credit Department investigated and felt reasonably sure that over a period of time they would collect one hundred cents on the dollar for these certificates. In the meantime, we are collecting interest on them, having had one payment on July 5th.

For the above reasons, we can not see where we have sold Brown-Graves Lumber Company at other than our regular terms—the certificates of deposit having been accepted only because when tendered, they were found acceptable by our financial division.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, APPELLANT

v.

UNITED STATES GYPSUM COMPANY ET AL.

APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

In the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia

CIVIL ACTION No. 8017

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF

v.

UNITED STATES GYPSUM COMPANY ET AL., DEFENDANTS

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, the United States of America submits herewith its statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on appeal to review the final judgment of the District Court entered in this cause on August 5, 1946, on which day the District Court also filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. A petition for appeal is presented to the District Court herewith, to wit, on September 30, 1946.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review by direct appeal the judgment entered in this cause is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended 723286—46——1.

(32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 15 U. S. C. sec. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C., sec. 345).

The following decisions sustain the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the judgment on direct appeal in this case:

United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208.

Sugar Institute, Inc. v. United States, 297 U. S. 553.

STATUTE INVOLVED

The pertinent provisions of Sections 1, 2, and 4 of the Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. secs. 1, 2, and 4, commonly known as the Sherman Act, are as follows:

> SEC. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: * * *. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *.

merce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *.

SEC. 4. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *

THE ISSUES AND THE RULING BELOW

This is an equity suit brought in August 1940 in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia against seven companies and seven officers of defendant companies charging them with conspiring to restrain interstate commerce in gypsum board and gypsum products and with monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and conspiring to monopolize such commerce, in violation of Sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Sherman Act. An expediting certificate was filed under the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended, and a three-judge district court was appointed. The court ruled in advance of trial that the Government was not entitled to show the invalidity of patents pursuant to which the defendants had fixed prices and imposed various other restraints (53 F. Supp. 889). Trial began in November 1943 and the Government closed its case on April 20, 1944. The defendants then moved to dismiss the case under Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure upon the ground that the plaintiff had shown no right to relief. On June 15, 1946, the court rendered an opinion holding that this motion should be granted and on August 5, 1946, it entered judgment dismissing the complaint.

The defendants are the sole manufacturers east of the Rocky Mountains of gypsum board, which consists of two outer sheets of heavy, tough paper firmly attached to a central gypsum core. Defendants' price-fixing first began in 1926 and early 1927 when four companies (one a defendant and the other three predecessors of defendant companies) entered into licensing agreements with defendant United States Gypsum Company (referred to herein as U. S. G.). The agreements authorized the licensees to make and sell gypsum board under various patents owned by U. S. G., including a product patent on closed-edge board the validity of which had been previously upheld. The licenses authorized U. S. G. to fix the licensees' minimum sales price on all board made under the product patent on closed-edge board.

Before and after the making of these licenses, officers of various defendants or their predecessors endeavored to induce all members of the industry to enter into like licensing agreements with U. S. G. Manufacturers of open-edge board offered it at lower prices than those maintained by U. S.

G. for closed-edge board and this led to severe competition and by 1929 gypsum board prices were substantially below 1927 prices. Efforts to induce the nonlicensees to accept price-fixing licenses from U. S. G. were renewed and culminated in a meeting in Chicago in May 1929 attended by most of the members of the industry and acceptance of price-fixing licenses by four out of the six nonlicensee manufacturers. These agreements were executed although U. S. G.'s patent on closed-edge board ran only until August 6, 1929, and although the licenses authorized U. S. G. to fix prices only on board made under this patent and during its term.

As a basis for continuing price fixing after August 6, 1929, U. S. G. made a contract to purchase two patents owned by one of its licensees. One of these patents, issued 12 years earlier, claimed as an invention a porous insulating material made by adding a cooked starch mixture to gypsum or other similar material and the other, issued in 1924, claimed as an invention the use of such a starch mixture in making gypsum board in order to insure adhesion of the paper liners to the gypsum core. U. S. G. thereupon offered to the members of the industry a license agreement covering its existing patents, its two prospective starch patents, and whatever patents might issue on certain pending applications for patents to make gypsum board by a foam process. In October or November 1929 all of the outstanding licensees entered into substantially identical new license agreements and the two nonlicensees signed like agreements shortly thereafter. The agreements remained in effect up to the time the present suit was filed.

In the above agreements U. S. G. licensed manufacture and sale of gypsum board under 49 enumerated patents (including the two starch patents which U. S. G. had contracted to purchase) and under the inventions claimed in its foam-process patent applications. The agreements gave U. S. G. the right to fix the minimum prices at which the licensee might sell any gypsum board (1) made by the licensee by use of any of the machines or appliances covered by any of the licensor's 49 patents and embodying inventions claimed in any of these patents; "or" (2) made by "second parties" and embodying inventions claimed in the starch patents; "or" (3) after issuance of any foam patent, board made by the licensee according to the process claimed in said patent. It was further provided that the minimum prices prescribed by U. S. G. should not exceed the prices at which it sold its own board.

U. S. G., with the cooperation of its licensees, carried out the price fixing authorized by the licenses so as to prohibit or meticulously police all business practices which might cause the ultimate price received by a licensee to deviate in any respect from the applicable minimum price prescribed in U. S. G.'s price bulletins. U. S. G. also set up a wholly owned corporation whose function it was to investigate and police, on the complaint of U. S. G. or any licensee, any deviation from the prescribed minimum prices.

The district court in concluding that the Government had not established that the defendants had illegally combined to fix the price of all gypsum board sold in the area east of the Rocky Mountains, made the following rulings:

(1) On the defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, every factual issue as to which the evidence before the court did not preponderate in favor of the plaintiff must be resolved against the plaintiff.

(2) The defendants' licensing agreements and their practices thereunder cannot be distinguished from those held to be valid in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476.

(3) Defendants did not have the burden of establishing that their price fixing was justified by their patent rights; the Government had the burden of establishing the contrary.

(4) Apart from certain declarations by defendants, there was no evidence that the license agreements were "non-bona fide" in character or purpose; therefore each prior declaration by a defendant which was put in evidence was evidence only against him and was not admissible as against any of his alleged coconspirators.

(5) The evidence, considered on the foregoing basis, does not establish that the license agreements were shams, i e., not intended to bind the parties to the promises made,[1] or that they were designed to achieve restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of U. S. G.'s patent rights.

(6) The defendants, in their actual operations under the license agreements, did not exceed the proper limits of rights given by patent law.

(7) Agreement among the defendants that all would enter into like price-fixing licensing contracts would not be illegal; in addition, the evidence fails to show that the defendants did so agree.

The most important issue raised by the appeal is whether the sanction which United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, gave to price fixing as a means of enforcing monopoly rights conferred by patents, applies to and validates the particular price-fixing combination and conspiracy formed by the defendants under the aegis of patents held by U. S. G. The appeal also raises the question whether the General Electric case should be overruled. In addition, the appeal brings in issue each of the rulings of the district court set forth above, as well as the question whether the Government, in a suit in which price fixing is sought to be justified as being a legitimate exercise of defendants' patent rights, may show the invalidity of the patents on which this defense is based.

THE QUESTIONS ARE SUBSTANTIAL

The decision in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, is predicated upon the Court's view (see pp. 481, 488) that General Electric had a patent monopoly which completely covered the making, using, and vending of the product as to which the patentee fixed the minimum prices of its licensee. In the present case the licensing agreements provided for fixing minimum prices on all board made by U. S. G.'s licensees which embodied any invention claimed in any of 49 U. S. G. patents. Of these 49 patents, only the two starch patents are in evidence and their claims extend only to gypsum board made in a particular way. There was therefore no showing that U. S. G. had a patent monopoly covering the vending of board not made under the starch patents and the price-fixing agreement went beyond any patent monopoly which U. S. G. was shown to have. The question whether the General Electric case validates an agreement to fix prices which is not confined to products over which the licensor has a complete patent monopoly of the vending thereof is one of substance.

In the present case all members of the industry, pursuant to a common invitation, entered into substantially identical licensing agreements at approximately the same time and with knowledge by all the parties that the effect of their common action would be to eliminate all price competition in gypsum board. The appeal raises the question whether the resulting restraints of trade were the product of agreement and conspiracy among the parties and were not within any monopoly rights given by patent law, within the principles of this Court's decision in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, and other like cases, or whether the restraints come within the ruling in the General Electric case. We submit that this question is substantial.

The appeal raises the question whether, under the circumstances presented in this case, all competing manufacturers may, without violating the Sherman Act, use patent license agreements as a means to organize their industry, increase and stabilize prices, eliminate jobbers, and otherwise regulate the industry in detail. The question whether the General Electric case is to be extended to permit an entire industry to be so knit together, thus giving all its members a noncompetitive profit, or whether such a combination transcends what is necessary for the protection of the patent monopoly and accomplishes a restraint of trade condemned by United States v. Masonite

Corp., 316 U. S. 265, and related cases, is a substantial one.

The appeal raises the question whether the General Electric case should be overruled. Reasons for regarding this question as one of substance are set forth in the statement as to jurisdiction filed by the Government in United States v. Line Material Co., No. 464, this Term.

The district court held that the Government in a Sherman Act proceeding is not entitled to show the invalidity of the patents under which the defendants assert rights by way of justification for price fixing. This ruling is believed to be in conflict with the grounds of decision in Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173, and the appeal, in challenging the district court's ruling, presents a substantial question.

The appeal questions the district court's interpretation of Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The decisions of different circuit courts of appeals are in conflict as to the meaning and effect of this Rule when a defendant moves to dismiss the action at the close of the plaintiff's evidence in a nonjury case, and the question raised by the appeal clearly is substantial.

The appeal raises other substantial questions concerning burden of proof and rules of evidence. Similar questions frequently arise in the trial of suits brought under the Sherman Act and determination by this Court of the issues which are raised should materially contribute to the proper conduct of such trials.

We believe that the questions presented by this appeal are substantial and that they are of public importance.

Respectfully submitted.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Solicitor General.

Before STEPHENS, Associate Justice, United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia (Presiding), and BLAND and GARRETT, Judges, United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, designated as Justices of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.[1]

STEPHENS, J.: This action, commenced by the United States, hereafter for convenience referred to as the Government, on August 15, 1940, is for equitable relief under Section 4 of the Sherman Act. The complaint charges that the defendants have been engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in gypsum products in violation of Sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Act.[2] It is alleged that the combination and conspiracy have been carried out in connection with certain patent license agreements based on patents owned by the United States Gypsum Company covering the manufacture of gypsum board. Upon these license agreements the defendants themselves rely as properly establishing prices and terms of sale of gypsum board within the doctrine of United States v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476 (1926). On March 12, 1943, the Government was permitted by order of this court to amend its complaint by adding a paragraph 46 (a) attacking the validity of the patents upon which the license agreements are based. The paragraph is in the following terms:

> 46a: Many of the patents mentioned and described in said license agreements by which the said combination has been, and is being carried out in part, are process or machine patents. The article and product claims of Roos patents No. 2,017,022, No. 2,079,338, No. 2,080,009, No. 1,914,345, and No. 1,938,354 mentioned and described in said license agreements, and said patents, are each invalid and void for each of the following reasons: (a) there is no real invention or novelty in the claims of said

patents; (b) the claims of said patents disclose no patentable invention in view of the prior art at the time the respective applications were filed; (c) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were shown and described in printed publications in the United States more than two years prior to the filing of the respective applications; (d) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents are inoperative and devoid of novelty or utility; (e) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were abandoned by the inventor and he was guilty of laches before the respective applications were filed; (f) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were not reduced to practice until after other inventors had invented and reduced the same to practice and applied for patents thereon; (g) the said alleged inventions are described in ambiguous and not in properly clear, concise, and exact terms; and (h) the defendants have been informed of the invalidity of the claims of the said patents and have unreasonably failed to file in the United States Patent Office any disclaimer of such claims. The said patents mentioned and described in the said license agreements, even assuming they are valid, are not basic article or product patents and do not singly or all together cover completely the business of mining and selling gypsum, or cover completely gypsum board, which is one of the forms in which unpatented gypsum is sold by the defendants, but at most constitute minor additions to the established and unpatented art of making gypsum board and afford no legal justification for the said combination.

The order allowing this paragraph to be added to the complaint was made expressly without prejudice to the right of the defendants to question the legal sufficiency of the allegations, and it was urged by counsel for all parties that a ruling upon this question should be made prior to the commencement of trial in order that counsel might be advised as to the necessity of preparation for attack upon, or defense of, the validity of the patents. The defendants accordingly filed this motion to strike or for partial judgment. The motion is one, pursuant to Rule 12 (f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to strike paragraph 46 (a) upon the ground that the allegations thereof are immaterial and impertinent to the issues in the case; and the motion is made, in the alternative, under Rules 12 (b) and 56 (b) for partial judgment dismissing that part of the Government's claim contained in paragraph 46 (a) upon the ground that as a matter of law the Government may not attack the validity of the patents in this proceeding in the manner attempted. It is conceded that the five patents mentioned in the paragraph were issued by the Commissioner of Patents, sometimes hereafter referred to as the Commissioner, and that none of them has heretofore been held invalid by any court. The dates of application and issuance of the Roos patents are: No. 2,017,022, application filed August 20, 1924, patent issued October 8, 1935; No. 2,079,338, application filed January 19, 1925, patent issued May 4, 1937; No. 2,080,009, application filed October 16, 1926,[3] patent issued May 11, 1937; No. 1,914,345, application filed July 7, 1932, patent issued June 13, 1933; No. 1,938,354, application filed March 15, 1933, patent issued December 5, 1933. The patents are each in the usual form, set forth in the margin.[4] It is not charged by the Government in its complaint that the issuance of the patents was obtained by fraud

No. 2,017,022

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

To All To Whom These Presents Shall Come:

Whereas Carlisle K. Roos, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, assignor to United States Gypsum Company, of Chicago, Illinois, a corporation of Illinois, presented to the Commissioner of Patents a petition praying for the grant of Letters Patent for an alleged new and useful improvement in Cementitious Materials, a description of which invention is contained in the specification of which a copy is hereunto annexed and made a part hereof, and complied with the various requirements of law in such cases made and provided, and

Whereas upon due examination made the said Claimant is adjudged to be justly entitled to a patent under the Law.

Now, therefore, these Letters Patent are to grant unto the said United States Gypsum Company, its successors or as-or any other wrongful act. What the Government asserts, in essence, is that, for the reasons set out in paragraph 46 (a), the Commissioner erred in issuing the patents. It is to be noted further that the attack upon the validity of the patents, in this aspect of the case, is not upon the ground that they are invalid because being used in violation of the Sherman Act; it is the converse, that the Sherman Act is being violated, through the license agreements, because the patents upon which the agreements are based are invalid. It is also to be borne in mind that, while this is not an independent cancelation proceeding, but an antitrust suit in which the Government signs for the term of seventeen years from the date of this grant the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the said invention throughout the United States and the Territories thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Patent Office to be affixed at the City of Washington this eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixtieth.

[SEAL] CONWAY P. COE,
Commissioner of Patents.

Attest:
H. S. MILLER,
Law Examiner.

Roos patent No. 2,079,338 is in haec verba, as are the other patents except that No. 2,080,009 is for an improvement in plaster wallboards and methods of making them; No. 1,914,345 for an improvement in wall construction; and No. 1,938,354 for an improvement in fire-resistant wall and ceiling structures.

contends that the patents are invalid, nevertheless the Government is seeking a judicial determination that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents and that they are for that reason invalid. This was conceded in the oral argument. And the Government's prayer asks cancelation of the provisions of the license agreements, asks that the defendants be perpetually enjoined from entering into any license agreements containing similar provisions, and that the defendants be enjoined from bringing any action for infringement of any of the patents now owned or controlled by them, and from attempting to collect royalties or license fees or profits for the use of the patents now owned or controlled by them, until it is made to appear to the court that all improper practices have been abandoned and the consequences of all misuses of the patents have been dissipated, and that the defendants be enjoined from entering into any license agreements relating to gypsum products without first obtaining the consent of the court. Accordingly, so far as the effect upon the defendants and the patents is concerned, the distinction between this suit and an independent cancelation proceeding is not substantial.

The essential question raised by the motion is whether or not the Government, in an antitrust proceeding prosecuted by its Department of Justice, can seek a determination that the Commissioner erred in issuing patents relied on by the defendants as a foundation for license agreements, and that the patents are therefore invalid, it not being charged that the action of the Commissioner was obtained by fraud.[5] The question involves inquiry into the authority of the Government to question its own action, and into the power of the court to review an administrative determination.

I

No statute answers the question. The Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 851, 35 U. S. C. § 68 (1940), providing that whenever an invention covered by a United States patent is used or manufactured by the United States itself without license of the owner, or lawful right, the owner's remedy shall be by a suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for compensation and that in such suit the United States may avail itself of any defense that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, contemplates, when read in connection with Rev. Stat. § 4920 (1875), 35 U. S. C. § 69 (1940), a defense based upon the ground that the patent was erroneously granted—thus allowing the Government to question the action taken by its own

[5] The term "invalid" as applied to patents issued in error is a misnomer. Strictly such a term should be applied only to patents obtained by fraud, or wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the Commissioner. But the term is constantly used in the authorities in application to patents issued in error, and for convenience and verbal consistency, will be so used herein.

official, the Commissioner of Patent. Cf. Richmond Screw Anchor Co. v. United States, 275 U. S. 331 (1928). But this statute is obviously not pertinent here. The Government is not in this case defending against accusation of infringement.

II

There is no controlling judicial decision directly in point. In United States v. Porcelain Appliance Corp., unreported (N. D. Ohio E. D. Sept. 9, 1926), an antitrust proceeding to dissolve an allegedly illegal combination, the court denied a motion to strike from the Government's bill allegations pertaining to the validity and scope of patents. The court reasoned that, while the suit was not one to cancel patents and it was probably beyond the scope of all possible issues to decree patents or patent claims to be void, it was conceivable that patents invalid or limited in nature, in view of the prior art, might be wrongfully used in building up an illegal combination, and that whether the case was of such nature as to permit or require inquiry into questions of validity or scope of patents could not be determined adversely to the plaintiff on a motion to strike out. The court did not, however, discuss the essence of the matter, i. e., the question whether the Government can raise an issue as to the validity of its own action in granting patents, and the case is not, therefore, of persuasive value; and, as it is a District Court decision from another jurisdiction, it is not controlling.

Other cases principally relied upon by the Government are the following, which are here enumerated, for convenience, in the order in which they will be discussed: United States v. Standard Oil Co., 33 F. (2d) 617 (N. D. Ill. 1929), reversed on other grounds, 283 U. S. 163 (1931); Crosby Steam Gage & Valve Co. v. Manning, Maxwell & Moore, Inc., unreported (D. Mass. Oct. 4, 1943); Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173 (1942); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 (1940); United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241 (1942); Ethyl-Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 (1940); United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265 (1942); United States v. Bell Telephone Company, 167 U. S. 224 (1897). In United States v. Standard Oil Co., an antitrust injunction suit alleging restraint of trade by virtue of agreements dealing with the right to use patented processes and apparatus, a master certified to the District Court the question of the admissibility of evidence offered by the Government to show lack of patentability in respect of two patents, and the court directed that the evidence be received. Later, in considering the master's report, which was favorable to the defendants on all issues, including that of validity of the patents, the District Court did not pass upon the patent validity question, stating that it was "divided respecting the right of the Government to attack the validity of the patents in these proceedings * * *" (33 F. (2d) at 623). Otherwise, the District Court reversed the decision of the master on the merits and the defendants then appealed to the Supreme Court which reversed the District Court. But the Supreme Court likewise did not pass upon the question of patent validity. The case therefore constitutes no ruling of any value, on the question now before this court. In Crosby Steam Gage & Valve Co. v. Manning, Maxwell & Moore, Inc., the United States was allowed to intervene in an action brought by a patentee to collect royalties, the defense in the action being that the license agreement had been validly terminated by the defendant because it violated the Sherman Act and because the patents upon which it was based were invalid. This decision again, however, constitutes no direct ruling except that a court may properly exercise its discretion to allow Government intervention in such an action as described. The court did not rule that the Government as intervenor would be allowed to introduce evidence to the effect that the patents were invalid. Indeed, it appears from the opinion that the Government had informed the court that if allowed to intervene it would be chiefly concerned with directing the attention of the court "first to the operation of this and similar license contracts made by plaintiff, and second to the form of decree which the Government deems appropriate." It is clear from the opinion that the court did not have in mind in allowing the intervention, and was not ruling upon, the question now before this court, i. e., whether the Government can attack the validity of patents which the Government itself has, through its Commissioner, granted. Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co. holds that if the price fixing provisions of a patent license agreement are, if not within the protection of a lawfully granted patent monopoly, violations of the Sherman Act, a patent licensee sued for royalties may offer evidence of invalidity of the patents upon which the license agreement is founded, notwithstanding rules of estoppel, whether local or Federal, which would otherwise forbid him, because of his license agreement, to do so. But this is not a ruling that the Government itself may in a Sherman Act proceeding attack the validity of patents which it has issued through the Commissioner. The attack in Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co. was by a private party. In respect of United States v. Univis Lens Co., Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, and United States v. Masonite Corp., the reliance of the Government in the instant case is upon mere dicta uttered in cases decided in terms of the question whether licensing and price fixing arrangements were or were not within the proper limits of a patent monopoly, but in which no question of validity of patents was raised.

In United States v. Bell Telephone Company, the Government relies in particular upon the following language in the opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer:

> Suits may be maintained by the Government in its own courts to set aside one of its patents not only when it has a proprietary and pecuniary interest in the result, but also when it is necessary in order to enable it to discharge its obligations to the public, and sometimes when the purpose and effect are simply to enforce the rights of an individual. In the former cases it has all the privileges and rights of a sovereign. The statutes of limitation do not run against it. The laches of its own officials does not debar its right. Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151; United States v. Nashville, Chattanooga &c. Railway, 118 U. S. 120; United States v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263. But when it has no proprietary or pecuniary result in the setting aside of the patent; is not seeking to discharge its obligations to the public; when it has brought the suit simply to help an individual; making itself, as it were, the instrument by which the right of that individual against the patentee can be established, then it becomes subject to the rules governing like suits between private litigants. * * * (167 U. S. 264–5). [Italics supplied.]

When read alone this language seems to lend aid to the Government's contentions in support of paragraph 46 (a), but when read in the context of the opinion and decision as a whole it is clear that it is not in conflict with the holding of the Supreme Court in the case. The holding is that while the Government may, in a direct cancelation proceeding, attack a patent on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, it may not secure a determination that it was issued in error. This case is discussed in greater detail below.

III

In addition to relying on the cases discussed above, the Government in support of its right to attack the validity of the patents referred to in paragraph 46 (a) makes four contentions of law. The first of these is that the Government when prosecuting an antitrust suit is acting in a sovereign as distinguished from a proprietary capacity and is hence not subject to local rules of estoppel. It is true that the Government is suing in sovereign capacity. But to say this does not answer the question before the court. The question is not really one of estoppel, which assumes a right but forbids its exercise. The question is a deeper one—whether the Government, having once issued these patents through the Commissioner of Patents, has any authority founded upon statute, case, or principle to repudiate its own action in so doing, or whether the courts have power, at the instance of the Government, to review the action of the Commissioner, in issuing the patents, in the absence of a charge of fraud in the obtaining of the same. It is to be noted in this connection that the grant of a patent is as much a sovereign act as the prosecution of an antitrust suit.

The second contention is that the present action, including the relief sought under paragraph 46 (a), is not a collateral attack upon the action of the Commissioner in granting the patents but a direct attack upon price fixing, in which the fact of invalidity of the patents may incidentally be shown and determined. But again, to demonstrate that the attack is incidental to a direct attack upon price fixing does not any more answer the question raised by the present motion than to say that the attack is sovereign. The fundamental question still remains: Where does the Government find the authority to question, even in an antitrust proceeding and incidentally, its own action once taken through the Commissioner of Patents, there being no charge of fraud in the obtaining of patents; or where does a Federal court find its power to review the action of the Commissioner at the instance of the Government?

The case principally relied upon by the Government under this aspect of its argument—Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Co., 168 U. S. 255 (1897); Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc., 279 U. S. 388 (1929); United States v. Bradford, 148 Fed. 413 (C. C. E. D. La. 1905), Affirmed per curiam, 152 Fed. 616 (C. C. A. 5th, 1907), certiorari denied 206 U. S. 563 (1907—do not answer these questions. The first two of these three cases correctly hold that, although a court does not have primary authority to deal with a question of patent invalidity, it may nevertheless determine such a question in a case in which it otherwise has power over the subject matter and parties. And all three of the cases correctly decide, stating their holding in general terms, that a court may incidentally determine a question of fact in a case in which the court has primary jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties even though it might not have authority to make such determination in a direct suit for that purpose. But obviously these cases do not decide the question involved in the instant motion to strike because in none of them was the incidental question raised by the very person whose action was being questioned. In Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Company the attack upon the validity of the plaintiff's patent was made by the defendant, a private party, and the same is true in Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc. In neither case was the Government seeking to repudiate and asking the court to review the Government's own action in the issuance of the patent. In United States v. Bradford, the attack in the Federal court, in a criminal prosecution, was upon the validity of the appointment of an administrator by a state court. But the question in that case would parallel the one involved under the instant motion to strike only if the United States itself had appointed the administrator. That case is further distinguishable because the appointment of the administrator was, according to the averments in the indictment, obtained by fraud and because the court appointing the administrator, under the facts averred in the indictment, lacked power to make the appointment so that the same was void. Thus these three cases leave unanswered the question before this court under the motion to strike paragraph 46 (a) of the Government's complaint.

The Government asserts, third, that patents for invention are only prima facie valid and the courts have always permitted a party "in a proper case" to show their actual invalidity in the respects mentioned in paragraph 46 (a) of the complaint. This is, of course, well established for private infringement cases. One accused of infringement may defend upon the ground that the accuser's patent is invalid for lack of invention. Reckendorfer v. Faber, 92 U. S. 347 (1875); Dunbar v. Myers, 94 U. S. 187 (1876). In Reckendorfer v.

Faber, where the plaintiff accuser contended that the Commissioner's decision was conclusive upon the point of invention and that that question was not open to the judgment of the court, the Court rejected the contention. The Government relies on the following statement of the Court:

> Before the commissioner is authorized to issue a patent, it must appear to him that the claimant is justly entitled to a patent; i. e., that his art, machine, or manufacture possesses all the qualities before mentioned. The commissioner must also be satisfied, that, if it possesses these qualities, it is sufficiently useful and sufficiently important to justify him in investing it with the prima facie respect arising from the governmental approval. * * *
> It is nowhere declared in the statute that the decision of the commissioner, as to the extent of the utility or importance of the improvement, shall be conclusive upon that point * * * (92 U. S. at 351).

In Dunbar v. Myers, again an infringement suit between private parties, the question of the validity of the patent was raised by the defendant. The Supreme Court, reversing a ruling of the trial court that on the facts the plaintiff's patent was valid, said:

> Persons seeking redress for the unlawful use of letters-patent must allege and prove that they, or those under whom they claim, are the original and first inventors of the > alleged improvement, and that the letters-patent have been infringed by the party against whom the suit is brought. Prima facie support to the first requirement is derived from the patent, if it is introduced in evidence and is in due form, provided the alleged improvement is one which in its nature is patentable. Evidence to overcome that presumption, however, is always admissible, if due notice is given by the opposite party, as required by law; and the question is now well settled, that the question whether the alleged improvement is or is not patentable, is, in an equity suit, a question for the court (94 U. S. at 196).

In Slawson v. Grand Street R. R. Co., 107 U. S. 649 (1882), the Court took the position that lack of invention could be urged in an infringement suit even though not specifically pleaded.

But the defendants in the instant case are not accused of infringement and the Government is not so accused. The assertion of the Government and the cases cited still leave open the question whether or not the instant case is "a proper case" for determination by the court of invalidity of the patents upon which the defendants' license agreements rest. That is to say, neither the proposition stated by the Government nor the cases cited answer the question whether the Government which issued the patents can, even in an antitrust suit, attack and the court review the validity of the Government's own action in issuing them.

No such question was presented in the cases cited, for in those cases the attack upon the validity of the patents was made by a private party.

The Government contends, fourth, that, assuming that in an ordinary antitrust proceeding the Government would be estopped to question the validity of the defendants' patents, nevertheless, on the facts of the instant case, the defendants are themselves estoppped to insist upon the point. It has been suggested above that the question presented under the motion to strike paragraph 46 (a) cannot be answered in terms of mere estoppel—that the question is more fundamental. However, the contention of the Government in this aspect of the case will be discussed in the Government's own terms. The argument of "estoppel against estoppel" divides itself into two propositions. In one the Government asserts that the Patent Office is overburdened and is also not in a position to make a searching examination and final determination of all considerations bearing upon the right of an applicant to obtain a patent, such considerations as inventions, utility, commercial success, novelty, anticipation, and the like, and that it accordingly relies heavily upon the oath and affidavits of the applicant in issuing a patent. And the Government declares that at the time the application was made to the Commissioner for issuance of the Roos "Foam" patent, No. 2,017,022, counsel for the applicant submitted an affidavit stating that more than 3 billion square feet of wallboard embodying the Roos invention had been manufactured and sold during the preceding ten-year period and that seven manufacturers, to wit, the present defendants or their predecessors, had taken licenses and were producing the board in large quantities. Evidence of commercial success, the Government points out, may properly be considered by the Commissioner in determining whether or not an alleged invention is patentable. But, contends the Government, the Commissioner had no practical means of checking the Roos figures or affidavit but evidently assumed them to be true; and no mention was made to the Commissioner, the Government avers, that the United States Gypsum Company and its licensees comprised all of the manufacturers east of the Rocky Mountains, that the license agreements under which the licensees operate provide for price fixing and had the effect, alleged by the Government in the instant case, of driving unpatented board from the market. Such matters, so it is urged, if known to the Commissioner, might obviously have had a bearing upon his determination. Spelling out its argument somewhat further, the Government asserts that the primary purpose of the industry in adopting the Roos patents may not have been so much to take advantage of their novelty or utility as that they afforded a ready means of bringing erstwhile competitors together in a combination in restraint of trade; that therefore some of the data furnished the Commissioner as a basis for the issuance of the Roos patent No. 2,017,022 may have been the result of the present combination. Hence, the Government contends, "It would be a strange perversion of law if the defendants could combine to provide the evidence of novelty and utility upon which a patent is issued and then be allowed to estop the Government from showing the true facts in an antitrust proceeding, since it had issued the patent[s] in reliance on that evidence."

But we think that the Government is itself "estopped" to make this contention in this case. The contention is in effect a charge that the Roos patent referred to was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the applicant. It is hence in conflict with the concession of the Government that there is no issue of fraud in this case in respect of the obtaining of the patents which it seeks to attack under paragraph 46 (a). At no point in the complaint, even in paragraph 46 (a), does the Government charge that the patents were obtained by fraud. And it is expressly stated at another point in the Government's brief presented under the instant motion to strike that fraud is a matter not in issue in the case. Commonwealth v. Bierly, 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 496 (1908), cited by the Government in this aspect of the case, was a case in which a patent had been issued by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for land on an application for a warrant (to be followed by a patent) alleging a vacancy when in fact no vacancy existed. Subsequently the Commonwealth took title to the same land for forestry purposes by mesne conveyances from the holder of an older title. It was held that one claiming under the junior patent could not allege that as the junior patent was issued by the Commonwealth for a valuable consideration the Commonwealth was estopped from afterwards acquiring by purchase the older title and setting it up to defeat its own later grant. Two considerations distinguish the case from the instant case. One is that the land laws of the Commonwealth neither required nor authorized, upon the filing of an application for a warrant, an independent investigation by the land office to ascertain the truth of the basic fact asserted in it. The warrant issued as of course, and the responsibility for the result that, if the land had been previously appropriated no title passed, was left to rest with the applicant who had voluntarily assumed it. The other consideration is that the rule of estoppel of a grantor to dispute the title of his grantee, as by setting up a prior paramount title in himself or in a third person, applies only to solemn deeds with covenants of seizin and warranty or for quiet enjoyment, and not to mere quitclaims containing none of the covenants referred to. A patent to an invention is not issued without investigation but on the contrary after consideration by expert patent examiners in the office of the Commissioner; and the grant of a patent to an invention is more than a mere quitclaim. There is set forth in the margin, supra, a copy of Roos patent No. 2,017,022 which is in the usual form in which the United States issues letters patent. The same indicates on its face due examination and a solemn grant.

The second proposition of the Government under its fourth contention of law is this: It is provided in each of the license agreements involved in the instant case that the licensees, who with the United States Gypsum Company comprise all of the manufacturers east of the Rocky Mountains, will not contest the validity of the United States Gypsum Company's patents; and in certain agreements of October 1929, the licensees in acknowledging the validity of patents already issued purport also to acknowledge the validity of any letters patent which may be granted or issued upon pending applications. In effect, therefore, the Government urges, the United States Gypsum Company has not only asked the Government through the Commissioner to issue the patents in suit upon its representations of fact but also it has combined with the licensee defendants to stop any normal test of their validity. Ordinarily, the Government asserts, the check upon the determinations of the Commissioner is the infringement suit; an invalid patent will either not be used at all by the inventor or if used will be quickly challenged by others interested in the art, since Rev. Stat. § 4920 (1875), 35 U. S. C. § 69 (1940), fully recognizes the rights of an alleged infringer to contest the validity of a patent. But in the circumstances of the instant case, says the Government, no one outside the group of licensee defendants is likely to hazard the expense necessary to make an effective challenge against "a powerful combination carefully fenced in behind, not one, but many patents in the art." This is in effect an argument by the Government that the defendants are not in court with clean hands. It was so put in the oral argument on this motion. The defendants, therefore, it is urged, have estopped themselves to insist that the Government may not attack the validity of the patents, and the matter is now at large. But there is nothing inherently unclean about an agreement by a licensee not to contest the validity of his licensor's patent. Indeed there may be circumstances in which such an agreement is natural and wholesome, as, for example, where after expensive delaying litigation between patentees and alleged infringers it is desired by such parties to settle their controversies by an agreement which will avoid future litigation. Such agreements not to contest the validity of patents are moreover not illegal, and the Government does not make an outright contention that they are. It suggests that they may be, or ought to be, treated as void as against public policy. But the only authority cited for this is Pope Manufacturing Co. v. Gormully, 144 U. S. 224 (1892). In that case the defendant had been granted a license to manufacture and sell stated patented devices under patents owned by the plaintiff and had agreed not to import, manufacture or sell devices covered by certain other patents, and had also agreed that he would not contest the validity of the plaintiff's patents or his title thereto. There was a further provision that if after termination of the license agreement the defendant manufactured, sold or used any devices covered by the patents involved in the agreement, the plaintiff might treat him as breaching the contract or as an infringer and might have an injunction issued by any court without notice. The action was for an accounting and injunction, it being asserted that the defendant had imported, manufactured or sold devices covered by "the other patents." But it was found that the defendant, due to the plaintiff's artifice, had signed the license agreement without comprehending its import so far as concerned the "unusual or oppressive" stipuations of that portion which forbade the defendant to contest the validity of or title to the plaintiff's patents, bound him to agree not to import, manufacture or sell devices covered by other patents, and subjected him to an injunction without notice. The Court held that, because of the oppressive character of the contract and the apparent artifice used by the plaintiff in securing the defendant's consent to it, the plaintiff was not in court with clean hands and could therefore not seek equitable relief. But the Court expressly declined to pass upon the question whether the contract was invalid as against public policy, i. e., it refused to answer the question whether the defendant could estop himself from disputing patents which might be void or to which the plaintiff might have no title. It is to be noted further that if, as the Government suggests, an agreement by a licensee not to contest the validity of the licensor's patent is void as against public policy, then the defendant licensees in the instant case are free to contest the validity of the patents, and therefore the premise of the Government's argument, that the Government ought not be forbidden to contest the validity of the patents for the reason that the normal test by individuals in infringement suits has been foreclosed, falls. It is to be noted also that the contention of the Government that the licensee defendants have bound themselves not to contest the validity of the patents and that no other persons are likely to do so and that therefore the Government ought to be permitted itself to raise the question of validity, is an argument of what the law ought to be with respect to the right of the Government to repudiate the action of its own Commissioner of Patents and the power of the courts to review the action of the Commissioner except where induced by fraud; it is not an argument as to what the law is. On that subject further comment is made below.

IV

The answer to the question presented by the motion to strike or for partial judgment dismissing paragraph 46 (a) lies not in the contentions made, and authorities cited, by the Government, but in considerations of a more fundamental nature:

1. The United States is an entity of conferred, not inherent, powers. Its authority is found in the objective law set up by the people in the Constitution, in statutes, in judicially recognized principles. What is true of the United States in this respect is true of its governmental departments and agencies. The Constitution, Art. I, § 8, Clause 8, gives Congress power "To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing, for limited Times, to Authors and Inventors, the exclusive Right to their respective writings and Discoveries." The statute authorizing the issuance of patents provides that:

> Any person who has invented or discovered any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvements thereof * * * not known or used by others in this country, before his invention or discovery thereof, and not patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, before his invention or discovery thereof, or more than one year prior to his application, and not in public use or on sale in this country for more than one year prior to his application, unless the same is proved to have been abandoned, may, upon payment of the fees required by law, and other due proceeding had, obtain a patent therefore [Rev. Stat. § 4886 (1875), amended 29 Stat. 692 (1897), 46 Stat. 376 (1930), 53 Stat. 1212 (1939), 35 U. S. C. § 31 (1940)].

The United States acts in its sovereign capacity in issuing patents under these constitutional and statutory provisions. There is nothing in them or in the Sherman Act or in judicially recognized principles that permits it to repudiate patents or to ask the courts to do so after their issuance, except for fraud in the obtaining of the patents. The right to cancel for fraud is mentioned below.

2. The attack upon the validity of the patents under paragraph 46 (a) involves a breach, as between the Government and the patentees and those dealing with the patentees, of the Government's grant. In issuing the patents through the Commissioner, the Government "upon due examination * * * adjudged [the claimants] to be justly entitled to a patent under the Law" and thereupon made a solemn grant. When an alleged infringer attacks the validity of a patent under Rev. Stat. § 4920 (1875), 35 U. S. C. § 69 (1940), he is breaking no grant of his own since he did not issue the patent. No private litigant could expect relief in a court of equity upon the premise of a broken promise on his own part. A fortiori the Government should not. On the contrary it should scrupulously keep and perform each of its own covenants. One of the first objectives and essentials of good government is order and certainty in relations between government and citizen. This cannot be secured if the Government itself is not to be depended upon to abide its grants, even if they have been improvidently or erroneously made. The attack of the Government upon the patents under paragraph 46 (a) is based upon the extraordinary premise that the Government can in one department issue a grant and in another question its own action, in the absence of charges of fraud in inducing the action. Common principles of justice and fairness in dealings between patent applicants and the Government give patentees a right to assume that their patents are valid insofar as any attack on them by the Government which issued them is concerned, unless the attack is for fraud in the obtaining of the patents.

In ruling that the Government cannot attack, nor the court review, in this proceeding the validity of the patents, the court does not assume to justify any misuse of the patents as a cloak for illegal restraints of trade or price fixing beyond the proper limits of a patent monopoly. If such conduct be shown, as charged, it is amenable to law. But that is a different aspect of this case; and two wrongs do not make a right. That the defendants may be shown to have misused the patents is no warrant for the Government's repudiating its own assurance that they were issued upon due examination and according to law and conferred an exclusive right for a given period of years. As pointed out above, in the present aspect of the Government's case, i. e., that arising under paragraph 46 (a), the patents are not attacked as invalid because illegally used; on the contrary illegal use is predicated upon their invalidity, and this is not charged in the complaint as due to any fraud or over reaching, but only to erroneous action of the Commissioner in issuing the patents.

3. It is settled law that although the Federal courts may compel an officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government to perform a ministerial duty or to refrain from threatened action clearly beyond legal authority and may, under the due process clause of the Constitution, examine upon a bill in equity into governmental action alleged to have been taken wholly without jurisdiction, or to have been arbitrary or induced by fraud, the courts do not have authority in the absence of statute to review the exercise of discretion or judgment by officers or agencies of the executive branch of the Government. Welch v. Obispo Oil Co., 301 U. S. 190 (1937); Leach v. Carlile, 258 U. S. 138 (1922); Houston v. St. Louis Independent Packing Co., 249 U. S. 479 (1919); see American T. & T. Co. v. United States, 299 U. S. 232, 236 (1936).[6] This is the theory which underlies the decision of United States v. Bell Telephone Company, 167 U. S. 224 (1897), certain language of which has been quoted above as relied upon by the Government in support of its contentions herein. That was a suit by the United States to cancel a patent to a telephone transmitter upon two separate grounds, one that the patent had been obtained by fraud, the other that the patentee was not the original and first inventor. It was held that the Government must fail as to the first ground because fraud had not been established; and that as to the second it must fail also, for the reason that "The judgment of the Patent Office, the tribunal established by Congress to determine such questions, was adverse to the contention of the Government, and such judgment cannot be reviewed in this suit." (167 U. S. at 264.) In the course of the opinion the Court discussed two previous cases, United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315 (1888), and United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 159 U. S. 548 (1895), saying there was nothing in either of them to conflict with the views expressed in the opinion. In concluding its opinion the Court said:

> In United States v. Telephone Co., supra [the reference is to the first of the two cases just mentioned], it was decided that where a patent for a grant of any kind issued by the United States has been obtained by fraud, by mistake or by accident, a suit by the United States against the patentee is the proper remedy for relief, and that in this country, where there is no kingly prerogative, but where patents for land and inventions are issued by the authority of the Government, and by officers appointed for that purpose, who may have been imposed upon by fraud or deceit, or may have erred as to their power, or made mistakes in the instrument itself, the appropriate remedy is by proceedings by the United States against the patentee.
> But while there was thus rightfully affirmed the power of the Government to proceed by suit in equity against one who had wrongfully obtained a patent for land or for an invention, there was no attempt to define the character of the fraud, or deceit or mistake, or the extent of the error as to power which must be established before a decree could be entered cancelling the patent. It was not affirmed that proof of any fraud, or deceit, or the existence of any error on the part of the officers as to the extent of their power, or that any mistake in the instrument was sufficient to justify a decree of cancellation. Least of all was it intended to be affirmed that the courts of the United States, sitting as courts of equity, could entertain jurisdiction of a suit by the United States to set aside a patent for an invention on the mere ground of error of judgment on the part of the patent officials. That would be an attempt on the part of the courts in collateral attack to exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Patent Office, although no appellate jurisdiction has been by the statutes conferred. We are of opinion, therefore, that the question, as stated, is not open for consideration in this case * * * (167 U. S. at 269–270). [Italics supplied.]

The Court said also in the course of the opinion:

> * * * the Government is as much bound by the laws of Congress as an individual, and when Congress has created a tribunal to which it has given exclusive determination in the first instance of certain questions of fact and has specifically provided under what circumstances that > determination may be reviewed by the courts, the argument is a forcible one that such determination should be held conclusive upon the Government, subject to the same limitations as apply in suits between individuals (167 U. S. at 268).

The decision of course does not constitute a direct ruling that the Government cannot seek in an antitrust proceeding, incidental to determination of the primary question of violation of the Sherman Act, a judicial determination of the invalidity of patents relied upon by the defendants as a basis of license agreements themselves urged in defense of the charge of Sherman Act violation. But the case does reflect the general principle that the Federal courts sitting in equity do not have power in the absence of statute to set aside at the instance of the Government a determination made by a tribunal or officer in the executive branch of the Government except when such determination has been induced by fraud. And the reasoning of the Court in the case is as apt for incidental attack upon the validity of patents as for direct attack.

There are similar rulings by the United States Supreme Court in respect of determinations of the Land Office. In United States v. Coronado Beach Co., 255 U. S. 472 (1921), the Government sought by a bill in equity to ascertain the rights of private parties in an island in the harbor of San Diego, California, and to condemn the island for public purposes. The Government contended that private ownership went only to the shore line, the Beach Company that it included tide lands. The title to the Beach Company was derived from a Mexican grant of 1846 to one Carrillo, a Mexican citizen, to whose rights the Beach Company had succeeded. Intermediate holders of the title had in 1852 petitioned Commissioners to settle Private Land Claims appointed under an Act of March 3, 1851, 9 Stat. 631, to confirm to them the land in question, and although this petition was rejected by the Commissioners, on appeal to the United States District Court the title was declared good and confirmed, the decree stating the boundaries on the north, east and south as in the original grant, and "west by the anchorage for ships, according to the documents of title and map to which reference is had." In 1869 a patent was issued reciting this decree, a return with a plat of a survey approved under the Act of 1851, and giving and granting the land described in the survey. The Government attempted to show that the extent of the land patent as thus confirmed was erroneous. The Court held that this was not allowable. Speaking for the Court Mr. Justice Holmes said:

> * * * The grant to Carrillo was bounded "west by the anchorage for ships" and although it well may be that in view of the purpose set out in his petition and the > circumstances the grant could have been construed more narrowly, that was a matter to be passed upon and when the decree and the patent went in favor of the grantee it is too late to argue that they are not conclusive against the United States. It is said that the field notes, not put in evidence at the trial, show that the deep water line was not surveyed, but was taken from the Coast Survey maps. But however arrived at it was adopted by the United States for its grant and it cannot now be collaterally impeached * * * (255 U. S. at 488).

The Government's attack in United States v. Coronado Beach Co., upon the land patent for error in issuing it was direct. A fortiori an indirect or collateral attack is not allowable. In Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 234 U. S. 669 (1914), there was a bill in equity to establish a right to lands. The plaintiff claimed under a clearly junior title but asserted that the grant to the defendant Railroad Company was invalid because the lands contained minerals. Mineral land was excepted by statute from grants. The District Court dismissed the bill and upon certification by the Circuit Court of Appeals of questions to the Supreme Court that Court said:

> The exclusion of mineral lands is not confined to railroad land grants, but appears in the homestead, desert-land, timber and stone, and other public-land laws, and the settled course of decision in respect of all of them has been that the character of the land is a question for the Land Department, the same as are the qualifications of the applicant and his performance of the acts upon which the right to receive the title depends, and that when a patent issues it is to be taken, upon a collateral attack, as affording conclusive evidence of the non-mineral character of the land and of the regularity of the acts and proceedings resulting in its issue, and, upon a direct attack, as affording such presumptive evidence thereof as to require plain and convincing proof to overcome it. Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 641; Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447; Maxwell Land Grant Case, 121 U. S. 325, 379–381; Heath v. Wallace, 138 U. S. 573, 585; Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad, 147 U. S. 165, 174; Burfenning v. Chicago, &c. Railway Co., 163 U. S. 321, 323. In this respect no distinction is recognized between patents issued under railroad land grants and those issued under other laws; nor is there any reason for such a distinction.

Of course, if the land officers are induced by false proofs to issue a patent for mineral lands under a non-mineral-land law, or if they issue a patent fraudulently or through a mere inadvertence, a bill in equity, on the part of the Government, will lie to annul the patent and regain the title, or a mineral claimant who then had acquired such rights in the land as to entitle him to protection may maintain a bill to have the patentee declared a trustee for him; but such a patent is merely voidable, not void, and cannot be successfully attacked by strangers who had no interest in the land at the time the patent was issued and were not prejudiced by it (234 U. S. at 691–2). [Citing cases.]

4. The Government's contentions in respect of the right to attack the validity of the patents under paragraph 46 (a) of the complaint really amount to an assertion not that it is, but that it ought to be, the law that notwithstanding the grant of a patent by the Commissioner of Patents the Government may test the validity of the patent in the courts. The Commissioner and his staff are asserted to be incapable, because of press of business and the conditions under which the Patent Office operated, including unavoidable ignorance of anticipation, of reaching conclusively dependable determinations in respect of the right to a patent; hence recourse to the courts to correct the Commissioner's action should be allowed, so it is urged. It is to be noted that this argument is as valid for direct attack as for incidental. If the assertions of the Government in respect of the limitations of the Patent Office are correct—upon this the court does not assume to pass—and if such limitations cannot otherwise be corrected, a case may perhaps be made for the devising of some test outside the Patent Office of the validity of patents. But it does not follow that it is within the proper function of the courts to devise it. There is of course a recognized place for growth of the law through judicial decision in the "interstitial" or borderline case, but radical departures or innovations are not properly made by courts. Judges are not appointed in representative capacity for the purpose of law making; and judicial innovations upon the law are especially to be avoided when they would upset transactions entered into on the faith of the law as it is. Conceivably there should be Congressional action creating a statutory right in the Government to test in the courts the correctness of determinations of the Commissioner of Patents, some such remedy perhaps as is now afforded patent applicants under Rev. Stat. § 4915 (1875), 35 U. S. C. § 63 (1940). But such a remedy if created by statute would undoubtedly be made prospective in effect, that is to say, would apply only to patents issued after the passage of the act. Moreover, the actions permitted under such a statute would properly be made subject to a limitation in time, so that after a given period the rights under a patent would be secure to the patentee and those dealing with him so far as interference by the Government was concerned. It is not within the proper function of courts to open the door by judicial innovation to Government attack on patents, retroactive in effect and without limitation in time, and thus to unsettle industrial security so far as it is based on the patent system.

There is authority to the effect that motions under Rule 12 (f) are not an appropriate means of testing the legal sufficiency of a pleading. Hartford-Empire Co. v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 47 F. Supp. 711, 6 Fed. Rules Serv. 12 b. 51 (W. D. Pa. 1942); Dysart v. Remington Rand, 31 F. Supp. 296, 2 Fed. Rules Serv. 12 b. 51 (D. Conn. 1939). Therefore the motion now before the court is ruled on in terms of the alternative motion for a partial judgment, and the court will order a dismissal of that portion of the Government's complaint contained in paragraph 46 (a) except the first and last sentences of that paragraph. It is true that, as suggested by the defendants, the last sentence is in somewhat conclusional terms, but the court thinks not objectionably so under the broad allowances of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to pleadings.

In deciding as the court does that the Government cannot properly attack the validity of patents as it seeks to do under paragraph 46 (a) of the complaint, it is not ruled that all evidence on the topics mentioned in those portions of paragraph 46 (a) other than the first and last sentences is necessarily inadmissible on some issue in the case other than that of the validity of the patents. It occurs from time to time in the trial of cases that evidence inadmissible in respect of one issue is admissible in respect of another. So far as the right of the Government to attack the validity of the patents is concerned, the court rules definitely that it has no such right, and the court no authority to pass on the same; that the patentees and those dealing with them had and have a right to assume the validity of the patents so far as any attack by the Government on its own grant is concerned. But in respect of other issues the relevancy, materiality and competency of evidence offered, whether or not it touches the topics mentioned in paragraph 46 (a), will be passed upon at the time of the offer.

I am authorized to state that Judge Garrett concurs in the foregoing opinion and decision.

BLAND, J., dissenting:

In my view, it makes little difference whether or not paragraph 46 (a) of the complaint is stricken, but the implication drawn from the striking of it requires that I briefly express my view in dissenting.

The Sherman Anti-Trust Law forbids illegal combinations or monopolies which restrain interstate trade. It is well-settled that an inventor or his assignee has the right to a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of his patented article. United States v. General Electric Co. et al., 272 U. S. 476 (1926). However, such a monopoly has been declared to be a "limited monopoly." Oxford Varnish Corporation et al. v. Ault & Wiborg Corporation, 83 F. (2d) 764 (C. C. A. 6, 1936); see also Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 91 (1902). Thus it is seen that when Congress passed the Sherman Act, we had two conflicting laws on the subject of monopoly. It is the duty of the courts, if possible, to harmonize the two statutes in such a way as to give force and effect to both and arrive at the true intent of Congress in the enactment of the antitrust law.

As I understand it, the chief reliance of the defendants in support of their contention that the Government in this case has no right, through its Department of Justice, to attack the validity of a patent, is upon United States v. Bell Telephone Company, 167 U. S. 224 (1897). The holding in that case, as pertinent to the inquiry here, is in the following language:

> Suits may be maintained by the Government in its own courts to set aside one of its patents not only when it has a proprietary and pecuniary interest in the result, but also when it is necessary in order to enable it to discharge its obligations to the public, and sometimes when the purpose and effect are simply to enforce the rights of an individual. In the former cases it has all the privileges and rights of a sovereign. The statutes of limitation do not run against it. The laches of its own officials does not debar its right. Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151; United States v. Nashville, Chattanooga &c. Railway, 118

> U. S. 120; United States v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263. But when it has no proprietary or pecuniary result in the setting aside of the patent; is not seeking to discharge its obligations to the public; when it has brought the suit simply to help an individual; making itself, as it were, the instrument by which the right of that individual against the patentee can be established, then it becomes subject to the rules governing like suits between private litigants. * * * [Italics mine.]

This case is not authority for a holding that the Government in the instant action, when acting for the public through the Department of Justice, being duly empowered by Congress to enforce the antitrust laws as against what it alleges is a combination built around certain invalid patents, is estopped from challenging the validity of said patents. On the contrary, the mandate of the Sherman Act is that, under the direction of the Attorney General by appropriate officers, proceedings shall be instituted to remedy the wrongs brought about by a violation of the Sherman Act. The statute calls into action and authorizes proceedings in which it may be determined whether the Sherman Act is being violated or "valid patent rights" are being exercised.

The exact question presented here has never been directly presented before as far as I know; and since I am convinced that there must be some new declaration of law made by our highest court as to where the line of demarcation rests between the exercise of valid patent rights and acts that are in violation of the antitrust laws, I feel that such cases as Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173 (1942), should be given more consideration than has been accorded them by the majority. In that case (a royalty suit) the defendant-licensee was, under the decisions, when the case came to the Supreme Court, barred from pleading the invalidity of the patent, but it pleaded that the agreement was in violation of the antitrust laws and that therefore it had a right to say that the agreement was unlawful if the patent was invalid. The Supreme Court upheld this contention and stated:

> Local rules of estoppel which would fasten upon the public as well as the petitioner the burden of an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act must yield to the Act's declaration that such agreements are unlawful, and to the public policy of the Act which in the public interest precludes the enforcement of such unlawful agreements. * * *

It also stated:

> * * * We granted certiorari * * * the question being of importance to the administration of the patent laws and the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

As a basis for my conclusion, I rely also upon the following authorities: Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488 (1942); United States v. Univis Lens Co., Inc., et al., 316 U. S. 241 (1942); United States v. Masonite Corporation et al., 316 U. S. 265 (1942); and Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc., et al., 279 U. S. 388 (1929). In the last-cited case the following is found:

> * * * Again, even if the logical conclusion from the establishing of Oppenheimer's claim is that Becher's patent is void, that is not the effect of the judgment. Establishing a fact and giving a specific effect to it by judgment are quite distinct. A judgment in rem binds all the world, but the facts on which it necessarily proceeds are not established against all the world, Hanson v. Williams, 213 U. S. 453, 455, and conversely establishing the facts is not equivalent to a judgment in rem.
> That decrees validating or invalidating patents belong to the Courts of the United States does not give sacrosanctity to the facts that may be conclusive upon the question in issue. A fact is not prevented from being proved in any case in which it is material, by the suggestion that if it is true an important patent is void—and, although there is language here and there that seems to suggest it, we can see no ground for giving less effect to proof of such a fact than to any other. * * *

The last-cited authority is important in view of my conclusion that the fact of invalidity is pertinent to the issue here involved aside from the question of the declaration of a patent's invalidity. The invalidity of defendants' patents, if any of them are invalid, is of concern here only in so far as it goes to the determination of the right of defendants to rely upon a patent monopoly for acts which would otherwise, admittedly, be contrary to the Sherman Act.

When the Department of Justice attempts to take action against a monopoly, it frequently occurs that the defendants contend that they have a right to have a monopoly and to restrain trade because their conduct is nothing more than the exercise of their rights under the patents laws. So, defendants file an answer, as they did in the instant case, showing that they rely upon the ownership of "valid patents" as an excuse for their contracts of price-fixing and trade-restraining. When such a defense is interposed, it is my view that, whether or not the Government has pleaded that the patents are invalid and regardless of the fact that they are to be regarded as prima facie valid, the Government has the right to show, if it can, that the patents relied upon are either invalid (concerning which the defendants would probably have more knowledge than anyone else) or are of such character in their relation to the prior art as to be no justification for violating the Sherman Act.

It seems to me that any other conclusion is anomalous. Can a defendant say, "Yes, I would be violating the Sherman Act if I were not acting under my valid patent rights," and then close the mouth of the Government to show that the patents are such as to be no justification for such a violation? In attacking the validity of the patents, as the Government seeks to do in the instant case, it is not attempting to establish invalidity for the purpose of cancellation or for the purpose of protecting any other inventor or anyone who wishes to manufacture defendants' products. It is attempting to show, in "discharge of its obligations to the public" under statutory mandate, the nature of the patents for the purpose of showing that they are no justification for the alleged monopoly and restraint of trade, whether valid or invalid.

In this view, it seems to me that the decisions relied upon by the majority are no authority for holding that the Government, under such circumstances, has no right to question the validity of the patents for the purposes stated. The result of the ascertainment of invalidity in the instant case is not the result sought in any decided case relied upon by the majority. It is the fact of invalidity which goes to the question as to whether or not the defendants in the instant case are using the patents as a smoke-screen (and I am not implying that they are) in order to carry on what the Government charges is a violation of the law.

If the striking of paragraph 46 (a), which alleges that the patents relied upon are invalid, implies that the court does not have the right to accept evidence as to the nature of the patents relied upon, even though it shows them to be invalid, I think the striking would be erroneous. If the paragraph is stricken because it is unnecessary, or if the evidence of invalidity could be accepted for other purposes, then it is of little consequence what happens to paragraph 46 (a).

I need not here discuss the broader aspect of the question as to whether or not the General Electric case (which, unlike the instant case, involved the conduct of principal and agent) should be modified where competitors and not bona fide agents are concerned, in the light of the present trend of decisions, and as to whether a valid patent monopoly should be held not to be one which encompasses the scope contained in the allegations of the Government. I have matured no view on this phase of the case.

For reasons hereinbefore stated, I feel compelled to dissent from the conclusion reached by the majority on the motion to strike and for partial judgment.

Argument: Page

I. Appellees, being erstwhile competitors, are engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices by means of common price-fixing license agreements 171
A. A plan designed to control prices is unlawful even though it rests on patent license agreements 173
B. Appellees have engaged in a conspiracy to employ patent license agreements to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices 187
1. The lower court's finding that no conspiracy has been shown in this case is clearly erroneous 190
2. The lower court erred in holding that the declarations of the appellees were binding only upon the declarants 195
3. Appellees have associated themselves together in furtherance of a common plan 200
4. The purpose of appellees' "plan" was to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices 207
II. The fixing of prices for a basic unpatented article because of narrow improvement or process patents would be an unwarranted extension of the doctrine of United States v. General Electric Company 218
A. The USG patents are not basic patents representing fundamental developments 221
1. The Utsman patent 225
2. The "starch" patent 226
3. The "foam" and "bubble" patents 229
B. Narrow improvement and process patents afford no basis for price control 231
III. Appellees have carried price control and industry regulation beyond anything reasonably adapted merely to secure pecuniary reward to USG for its patent monopoly 243
IV. If appellees' combination is sanctioned by the General Electric case, that case should be overruled 256
A. The rule is uncertain and difficult of application 257
B. The rule leads to consequences of a sort condemned by the antitrust laws 266
C. Price control tends to defeat the objectives of the patent laws 271

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the district court on appellees' motion to dismiss the complaint (R. 3933–4131) is reported in 67 F. Supp. 397. Its opinion on appellees' motion to strike paragraph 46 (a) of the complaint, the paragraph alleging the invalid-ity of certain patents, or, in the alternative, for partial judgment dismissing that part of the Government's claim therein contained (R. 369–395), is reported in 53 F. Supp. 889.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the district court was entered on August 5, 1946 (R. 4169). The petition for appeal was filed on September 30, 1946, and was allowed the same day (R. 4187–4188). The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823, 36 Stat. 1167, 15 U. S. C. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157, 38 StSat. 804, 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. 345). Probable jurisdiction was noted on December 16, 1946 (R. 4204).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether a combination among appellees, who together comprise all manufacturers of gypsum board, to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices by entering into patent license agreements containing price-fixing provisions with USG, the owner of certain patents and the dominant manufacturer in the industry, constitutes a conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act; and whether the evidence, properly considered, establishes the existence of such a combination among the appellees.

2. Whether the owner of process or narrow improvement patents may condition a license to use the patented process or to make, use, and vend the patented product upon the condition that the licensee not sell the unpatented product produced by the patented process or the product to which the narrow improvement patent relates at less than the minimum prices established from time to time by the patentee.

3. Whether the prices and conditions of sale which appellees have imposed upon trade and commerce in gypsum board and related products are normally and reasonably adapted to the securing of a pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly.

4. Whether the holding in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, which permitted a patentee to condition a license to make, use, and vend the patented product on the requirement that the licensee sell the patented product by the method and at the prices fixed by the patentee should now be overruled.

5. Whether the Government in a proceeding instituted under Section 4 of the Sherman Act to prevent and restrain violations of the Act may show the violation of the Act by proving the invalidity of patents relied upon to justify the restraint and monopolization of trade and commerce.

6. Whether under the rule of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 249, the declarations of one person are admissible in evidence against and binding upon other persons when it has been shown by evidence aliunde that they are associated together in a combination lawful or unlawful.

7. Whether documents admitted to be genuine under Rule 36 F. R. Civ. P. which contain declarations in furtherance of a conspiracy are binding upon the non-admitting appellees.

8. Whether the Government in a proceeding under Section 4 of the Sherman Act to prevent and restrain a price-fixing combination establishes a prima facie violation of that Act by showing the existence of a combination among all the competitors in the industry to fix the prices and terms of sale of a patented product or whether, in addition, it is required to negative a defense based upon the ownership of patents.

STATUTE INVOLVED

The Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209 (15 U. S. C. 1, 2, 4), known as the Sherman Act, provides in part as follows:

> SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: * * *.
> SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

* * * * *

SEC. 4. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *

STATEMENT

This is a civil action instituted by the United States in 1940 under Section 4 of the Sherman Act to enjoin and restrain violations of Sections 1, 2, and 3 of that Act. The complaint, as amended, charges the appellees with combining and conspiring to fix arbitrary and noncompetitive prices for gypsum board; to standardize gypsum board and its method of production for the purpose of eliminating competition; to raise and stabilize prices for plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products; to control the distribution of gypsum board and eliminate jobbers, and to control the resale price of manufacturing distributors of gypsum board (R. 1, 9–10). The case was tried before a three-judge district court constituted in 1942 pursuant to an expediting certificate filed under the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (R. 304). In advance of trial the court ruled that the Government was not entitled to show the invalidity of patents pursuant to which the defendants had fixed prices and imposed various other restraints (R. 369, 396).

Trial began in November 1943 and the Government closed its case on April 20, 1944. The evidence introduced by the Government consisted of about 650 documents and the testimony of 28 witnesses, 21 of whom were, or had been, officers or employees of companies alleged to be parties to the conspiracy. Many of the documents consisted of contemporaneous letters or memoranda written by these 21 witnesses. After the Government had rested the defendants each moved to strike from the record all the exhibits and testimony which were received as to each defendant subject to the usual reservation with respect to the declarations of alleged co-conspirators (R. 3891); also to dismiss the case under Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure upon the ground that upon the facts and the law plaintiff had shown no right to relief (R. 3901).

On June 15, 1946, the court rendered an opinion (R. 3933–4131) holding that the motions should be granted and, on August 5, 1946, filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered judgment dismissing the complaint (R. 4169). The district court in entering judgment made the following rulings:

1. Association of defendants in a common plan to organize the industry and stabilize prices under like price-fixing patent licensing contracts would not be illegal. In addition, the evidence shows that there was no such plan.

2. Defendants did not have the burden of establishing that their price fixing was justified by their patent rights; the Government had the burden of establishing the contrary.

3. The defendants' licensing agreements and their practices thereunder cannot be distinguished from those held to be valid in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476.

4. The declarations of one defendant were inadmissible against other defendants because there was no independent evidence to establish the unlawful conspiracy.

5. Apart from these declarations by defendants, there was no evidence that the license agreements were "nonbona fide" in character or purpose; therefore each prior declaration by a defendant which was put in evidence was evidence only against him and was not admissible against any of his alleged co-conspirators.

6. The evidence, considered on the foregoing basis. does not establish that the license agreements were "sham", i. e., not intended to bind the parties to the promises made,[1] or that they were designed to achieve restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of USG's patent rights.

7. The defendants in their actual operations under the license agreements did not exceed the proper limits of rights given by patent law.

8. On the defendants' motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, every factual issue as to which the evidence before the court did not preponderate in favor of the plaintiff must be resolved against the plaintiff.

The assignment of errors challenges each of these rulings, certain of the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and certain other holdings or rulings of the court made in course of trial, as well as the ruling made in advance of trial, that the Government was not entitled to show the invalidity of the patents on which the defendants rely.

The evidence upon which the Government relies consists in the main of contemporaneous documents and of the uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached witnesses. On a number of important matters the findings of the court below are, in our view, inconsistent with such evidence. The Court will not appreciate how clearly erroneous those findings are unless it actually reads many of the documents and some of the testimony. Accordingly, in order to facilitate the Court's consideration of the case and in the interest of ultimate brevity we are setting forth the documented facts in some detail in this Statement. Particular findings claimed to be erroneous are discussed in footnotes at an appropriate point in the narrative Statement. The unusual length of the Statement is, we believe, required by the nature and magnitude of the case.

THE APPELLEES

The appellee companies are engaged in the mining and production of gypsum and in the manufacture of gypsum products, principally gypsum board [2] and gypsum plaster (Fdg. 3, R. 4133). Each sells gypsum products in interstate commerce to distributors and consumers within the so-called Eastern area which includes the states east of the Rocky Mountains (Fdg. 3, R. 4133). The appellees combined manufacture 100% of the gypsum board and a substantial percentage of the plaster sold in the Eastern area (Fdg. 21, R. 4144).

United States Gypsum Company (USG) was incorporated in 1901 to effect a merger of 35

[2] Gypsum board or board is used to refer to gypsum plasterboard, gypsum lath, and gypsum wallboard.

producers, processors and distributors of gypsum products. During the last twenty years it has acquired the gypsum plants of eight additional producers including the Niagara Gypsum Company (Niagara). USG now operates 16 plants in the Eastern area, at 13 of which board is produced. Since its organization in 1901 it has been the largest producer of gypsum board and plaster in the United States. In 1939 it produced and sold approximately 55% of all the gypsum board and a substantial amount of all plaster sold in the Eastern area. In that year its sales in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to approximately $10,600,000. Appellee Sewell L. Avery was president of USG from 1920 to 1936 and since that time has been chairman of its board of directors. The appellee Oliver M. Knode is president of USG. (R. 3, 6, 162, 264, 270.)

National Gypsum Company (National) was incorporated in 1925 and commenced production of gypsum board and plaster in 1926. In 1935 it acquired Universal Gypsum and Lime Company (Universal) and in 1936 the Atlantic Gypsum Products Corporation (Atlantic). National, now the second largest producer of gypsum board in the United States, operates ten plants in the Eastern area, eight of which produce gypsum board. In 1939 it produced approximately 23% of all gypsum board and 20% of all plaster manufactured and sold in the Eastern area. In that year its sales in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to approximately $4,500,000. Appellee Melvin H. Baker is president of National. (R. 3, 7, 162, 215, 217.)

Certain-teed Products Corporation (Certain-teed) entered the gypsum industry in 1923 by acquiring the six gypsum plants of the Acme Cement Plaster Company, but did not commence manufacturing gypsum board until 1926. In 1928 it acquired the Beaver Products Company, Inc., and the Beaver Board Company (both sometimes referred to as Beaver), then the second largest producer of gypsum board. Beaver had entered the gypsum industry in 1920 by the purchase of the American Cement Plaster Company and Bestwall Manufacturing Company (Bestwall). Certain-teed now operates five plants, four of which produce gypsum board, and is the third largest producer of gypsum products in the United States. In 1939 it produced approximately 11% of all gypsum board and 10% of all plaster manufactured and sold in the Eastern area. In that year sales of Certain-teed in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to $2,100,000. Appellee Henry J. Hartley is president of Certain-teed. (R. 3, 7, 162, 230, 235.)

The Celotex Corporation (Celotex), the largest producer of fiber insulating board in the United States, entered the gypsum industry by acquiring the American Gypsum Company (American) in 1939. In 1939 sales by Celotex in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to approximately $585,000. (R. 7, 162, 195.)

Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc. (Ebsary) has been engaged in the manufacture of plaster since 1918, and gypsum board since 1928. Its sales of gypsum board in the Eastern area in 1939 amounted to approximately $670,000. Appellee Frederick G. Ebsary is president of Ebsary. (R. 8, 162, 164.)

Newark Plaster Company (Newark) has been engaged in the production of plaster since 1922 and the manufacture of gypsum board since 1937 when it acquired the Kelley Plasterboard Company, Inc., which had been engaged in the production of board since before 1918. Newark's sales in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to approximately $750,000 in 1939. Appellee Frederick Tomkins is president of Newark. (R. 8, 162, 298.)

Appellee Samuel M. Gloyd is the sole owner of an unincorporated business trading under the name of Texas Cement Plaster Company (Texas). It has been manufacturing plaster since about 1902 and gypsum board since 1924. Its sales in the Eastern area of gypsum board amounted to approximately $230,000 in 1939. (R. 8, 162, 176.)

THE GYPSUM INDUSTRY

Gypsum is a rocklike mineral composed of calcium sulphate in combination with water and is found in deposits in numerous states of the United States and in Canada. After it is mined it is crushed and subjected to a process known as calcination to evaporate part of its water content. The resulting product known as calcined gypsum or stucco has the characteristics of readily recombining with water to form a hard, rigid mass. Calcined gypsum is the primary constituent of various important products used in the construction industry. (Fdg. 4, R. 4133.) Its principal products are gypsum board and plaster. In addition, there are several less important products such as gypsum block and tile. In 1939 the sales value of all products of calcined gypsum used in the building industry in the United States amounted to $42,000,000, $23,000,000 of which was accounted for by gypsum board and $17,000,000 by plaster.

Until about the year 1900 lime was the principal ingredient of all wall plaster. About 1900, however, gypsum became commercially important as an ingredient of plaster in place of lime. Since that time, gypsum has gradually displaced lime in plaster, and over 90% of all plaster now used in building construction in the United States is made with gypsum.

The basic patents on gypsum board have long since expired. Commercial production of gypsum board commenced about 1905. For many years thereafter, by far the greatest amount of gypsum board produced was board designed to be used as a base for plaster in wall and ceiling structures and known as plasterboard. About 1925, a board smaller than plasterboard, known as gypsum lath, was introduced on the market as a plaster support. By reason of the smaller and, therefore, more convenient size of gypsum lath, it has displaced plasterboard in new construction, and plasterboard is now used solely for repair work. Today gypsum lath is usually 3/8 or 1/2 inch in thickness, 16 inches wide, and it is either 32, 36, or 48 inches long. The sales value of gypsum lath and plasterboard manufactured by the appellee companies and sold in the United States in 1939 was about $13,000,000.

Several years after the first commercial manufacture of plasterboard, a gypsum board, known as wallboard and designed to be used as a finished panel in place of plaster and lath, was introduced on the market. Gypsum wallboard is now one of the most important of various boards on the market which are used as substitutes for plaster and lath. Today wallboard is either 1/4, 3/8, or 1/2 inch in thickness, 32, 36, or 48 inches wide, and comes in various lengths from 4 to 12 feet long. The sales value of gypsum wallboard manufactured by the appellees and sold in the United States in 1939 was about $8,500,000.

All gypsum board consists of a flat, thin core of hardened calcined gypsum covered on both surfaces with heavy paper, known as liners. Since gypsum lath and plasterboard are intended to support plaster, the paper liners with which the surfaces of the gypsum core are covered are coarse. Because gypsum wallboard is a substitute for both plaster and lath, and is therefore not covered with plaster, one of its liners consists of a good grade of heavy, smooth paper.

In the early period of its manufacture, gypsum board was crudely made by pouring buckets of calcined gypsum mixed with water in thin layers between two pieces of rough felt paper, smoothing the product with rollers, hardening it on racks and trimming the pieces to size (Fdg. 5, R. 4133). For many years—at least since 1920—board and lath have been made by depositing the wet gypsum or gypsum slurry on a continuous sheet of paper that unrolls and moves along on a belt or conveyor some several hundred feet in length. After the slurry is placed on the lower sheet of paper it is mechanically spread substantially even over it; the top sheet of paper then unrolls and is pressed down on the slurry as it passes under rollers. At the end of the conveyor the board is cut to size and placed in dryers from which it comes out as a finished product in about thirty minutes. (R. 476–477.) Perforated lath is made by punching holes in lath made in this manner. Metallized board has a paper-thin thickness of metallic foil attached to one surface of ordinary board or lath.

THE CONSPIRACY

A. The conspiracy in 1925–1926

Prior to 1912 the edges of the core of all gypsum board were exposed. About 1912 USG commenced the manufacture of a gypsum board with the side edges bound and sealed by folding the lower paper liner over the edges of the core. The end edges of the board continued to be exposed as before. This improvement was covered by United States letters patent Number 1,034,746 issued August 6, 1912, upon the application of Clarence W. Utzman, and assigned by him to USG. The board embodying the edges described in the Utzman patent was known as a closed-edge board as distinguished from board with an unprotected edge which was known as open-edge board. The closed-edge board represented an improvement over the open-edge board then on the market since it reduced breakage in shipment and crumbling of the core at the side edges when being nailed into place.

Prior to 1917 the Bestwall Manufacturing Company (Bestwall) commenced the manufacture of a closed-edge type of board. In July of that year USG filed suit against Bestwall and in July 1919 obtained a judgment holding the Utzman patent valid and infringed. This judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on January 4, 1921 (Fdg. 6, R. 4434). During the course of this litigation Bestwall had been acquired by Beaver, which then became the second largest manufacturer of gypsum board in the United States, and both were manufacturing a board with semi-closed edges. By a supplemental bill USG sued both of these companies for infringement and again prevailed. Beaver appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Blagden, who had become president of Beaver in 1923, made overtures of compromise and settlement of this litigation to Avery, both before and after the decision of the trial court (R. 784–785). At a meeting of Blagden and Avery on December 10, 1925, Avery specified as terms of settlement the payment of damages by Beaver for infringement of USG's patents; acknowledgment by Beaver of the validity of USG's patents; payment of royalties; and the right in USG to fix prices on board made and sold by Beaver under the Utzman closed-edge patent (R. 785–790).

On December 12, 1925, immediately following this conference, Blagden wrote Avery that, as he had previously informed Avery, he, Blagden, and his attorney "have been working up a memorandum in which we have attempted to analyze the results of all possible decisions by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the matters in controversy and contrasted such results with a compromise and adjustment of the suit along the lines I have discussed with you," and stated that he was enclosing a copy of the memorandum. His letter concluded that, "a settlement along the lines discussed by us would be more advantageous than any possible decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals" (Ex. 184, R. 5337).[3]

The memorandum, Exhibit 185 (R. 5338–5347),[4] accurately forecast what was to happen in the gypsum board industry in the next several years. In this memorandum, Blagden pointed out the various possible judicial decisions as to the status of the Utzman patent. With respect to each, Blagden stated in some detail what the normal result of such a decision would be, and under each concluded with the significant statement that, in such case:

> Plaintiff [USG] would lose irrevocably its present opportunity to organize the industry and stabilize prices.

[3] Since the only exhibits referred to in this brief are those introduced by the Government, they are designated as "Ex. —" instead of as "Gov't. Ex. —."

[4] This letter (Ex. 184, R. 5337) together with the memorandum enclosed therewith (Ex. 185, R. 5338) was obtained from the files of USG. Blagden, called as a witness, identified the two exhibits, and his testimony on cross-examination in nowise weakened their force (R. 871).

Blagden then went on to contrast the enumerated results with the results that would follow if the suit were compromised and settled. He pointed out that if the suit were settled:

> 1. Defendant [Beaver] would acknowledge validity of Utzman patents.
> 2. Defendant [Beaver] * * * would agree to pay plaintiff [USG] a reasonable royalty * * *.
>
> 3. Defendant [Beaver] would agree to use its best endeavors to induce manufacturers of closed-edge wallboard * * * to accept licenses * * *.
>
> 4. Such recognition of and acquiescence in plaintiff's [USG's] patents would enable plaintiff to maintain a lawful price control and avoid the necessity of reduction by plaintiff of current prices to meet competition * * *.
>
> 7. Plaintiff [USG] would be able to take a dominating position in the industry with an opportunity to control or at least participate in the control of prices through legitimate means of patent licenses (R. 5346–5347).[5]

[5] The trial court in its opinion summarized Exhibit 185, R. 5338, by saying merely that Blagden had suggested a settlement and license enabling USG to maintain "a lawful price control" through the "legitimate means of patent licenses," Blagden to endeavor to induce other manufacturers to accept licenses and permit USG to take a "dominating position." It will be noted that the court took the phrase "lawful price control" from paragraph 4, quoted above, but omitted the rest of the sentence, which reads, "and avoid the necessity of reduction by plaintiff [USG] of current prices to

On May 12, 1926, Frank J. Griswold, general manager of American, wrote J. H. McCrady, president of American, that (Ex. 104, R. 5260):

> I just returned from a meeting at Buffalo yesterday with Mr. Blagden, President of Beaver Products Company. He has had one or two interviews with Avery on the matter of settling all disputes and litigations between the wall board manufacturers by entering into a licensing arrangement and the thing looks very favorable.[6] We are standing on 50¢ per M meet competition * * *" (R. 4102). The omission destroys the intent and purpose of the sentence.

An even more substantial omission on the part of the trial court is its failure through an extended opinion to make any reference whatever to Blagden's main proposition that, unless USG should settle with Beaver and grant industry-wide licenses with price fixing, it "would lose irrevocably its present opportunity to organize the industry and stabilize prices." [Italics supplied.] The court's complete failure to attach any significance to this phrase was clearly erroneous.

[6] The court below stated that "Blagden testified that he did not discuss with Avery the matter of all companies settling disputes and taking licenses" (R. 4110). The record shows, however, that when Blagden was questioned concerning the meetings referred to in the second sentence of Ex. 104, he testified: "I only remember having interviews with him on discussing our own settlement. I remember that we had two or three meetings, several meetings in Chicago on other subjects, and naturally at some of them there we would discuss the board question" (R. 800). Following this the Presiding Justice asked: "Do you remember discussions on that broad a subject?", to which Blagden answered: "No, sir" (R. 801). It is evident that Blagden did not deny that he had had the discussions referred to with Avery, as the court stated, but at most that he could not remember events occurring 17 years > royalty. Avery is talking about $1.00 per M and I am inclined to think he will probably stand pretty firm on this price. However, on his own admission he has so much at stake on the proposition that he may change his views.

> This matter will be discussed by all independent wallboard manufacturers at a meeting in Chicago next Wednesday afternoon and probably some definite action taken on it as the probabilities are that Avery may meet with us at that meeting * * *. According to the plans we have[7] we figure that there is a possibility of us holding the price steady on wallboard for the next fourteen or fifteen years which means much to the industry.[8]

The meeting referred to by Griswold was held as scheduled in Chicago on Wednesday, May 19, 1926, and was attended by Avery, Blagden, Griswold, and representatives of every board manu-previously; hence the force of the contemporaneously written Exhibit 104 is in no way impaired. The finding to the contrary is obviously without support. There is no doubt at all on the essential point that Blagden did talk with all members of the industry.

[7] Except as otherwise indicated, all italics are supplied.

[8] Griswold testified that when he wrote in Exhibit 104 of the plans for holding prices steady on wallboard for "the next fourteen or fifteen years" he was under the impression that the life of a patent was 20 years and that USG would base price control on the Birdsey patent, rather than the Utzman patent (R. 700). There is no question from Griswold's testimony that the plan he had in mind was to obtain price stabilization by means of patent licenses (R. 570–571, 576).

facturer except Texas and National (R. 240–241, 278, 520, 833–834). The subject of the conference was the licensing of those present (R. 278, 240–241). USG claims that the conference was concerned solely with "the possibility of the settlement of all outstanding litigation between * * * USG, and other manufacturers of gypsum board" (R. 278), but it is significant that Certain-teed, which was represented, was not then even manufacturing board, although it contemplated doing so.

In the succeeding months of June and July 1926, Blagden had further conferences with representatives of USG (R. 808). During these conferences Blagden offered to transfer to USG all the patents that Beaver had in any way relating to the manufacture of gypsum board. Blagden testified that the Beaver and USG patents on the closed-edge type of board were practically all the patents there were on this type of edge. Blagden pointed out to Avery that by combining the 30 or more Beaver patents and applications with those of USG, USG would be in a better position to come to an agreement with the other manufacturers (R. 790-797). USG accepted the offer of Blagden and the patents were in fact transferred to USG on July 29, 1926. On the same day Beaver and USG settled their litigation and USG granted Beaver a license (R. 39). About six weeks later Universal and USG also settled their patent infringement suit, and on September 17, 1926, Universal, too, became a licensee of USG (Ex. 2, R. 4226). Both of the above license agreements were substantially identical and among other things provided that:

(a) USG licenses Beaver and Universal to use inventions covered by the Utzman patent, 29 other patents, and 38 applications for patents, in manufacturing gypsum board, until the expiration of the Utzman machine patent on February 10, 1937. These patents and applications included those transferred to USG by Beaver.

(b) USG reserved the right to determine and fix, during the life of the Utzman closed-edge patent, or until August 6, 1929, the price at which the licensees sold closed-edge board.

(c) The licensees agreed to pay specified royalties on all board manufactured by them, whether patented or unpatented, until February 10, 1937.

(d) The licensees agreed to admit that all board having a protected edge fell within the scope of the Utzman patent, during the life of that patent, and that, after its expiration, all board having a protected edge was made under the machine patent or under other patents covered by the license agreements.

(e) The licensees acknowledged, and agreed not to contest, the validity of all patents covered in the license agreements and of all patents subsequently issued on applications covered in the agreements.

After the execution of the Beaver-USG license agreement, Blagden continued his efforts to induce other manufacturers of board to become licensees, as he stated he would do in Exhibit 185. He testified that he had conversations with Brown of Certain-teed (R. 831), Haggerty of National (R. 862), Fuller of Atlantic (R. 862), Gloyd of Texas (R. 862), Ebsary of Ebsary (R. 861), and Shearer of Universal (R. 827). He also testified that he "undoubtedly talked to some others" (R. 863). He recalled the subject matter of these conversations as follows (R. 862):

> Whenever I met with these gentlemen they would ask me were we going to take out a license, or had we taken out a license with U. S. Gypsum, and I would tell them that we had, and if they would ask me, "Well, what do you think about it?" I would say, "I would advise you to join up."

On October 1, 1926, Blagden wrote Avery and, referring to the Beaver-USG license agreements, stated (Ex. 189, R. 5349):

> I feel that the "entente cordial" that has started between our companies is only a beginner and that if we play the game right it should bring about big things.

When Blagden was asked what he meant by this statement, he answered (R. 864–865):

> I said in my previous testimony—stability, and I meant by that that in addition to our taking out a license, that undoubtedly others would take out licenses and that would tend toward stability.

Q. And by "stability", what do you mean, sir?

A. Stabilizing the prices in the industry.[9]

After the industries meeting in Chicago in May 1926, Griswold began to play a more active part, his goal also being industry-wide participation in the licensing arrangement in order to eliminate litigation in the industry and to stabilize prices (R. 5285; 663–664; 574).[10] On June 2, 1926, Griswold wrote Avery that he had met with Haggerty of National, which had not been represented at the Chicago meeting, and given him the details of that meeting, and stated that when he left,

[9] The court below in its discussion of Exhibit 189 (R. 4111), referred only to that part of Blagden's testimony where he said he meant by "entente cordial" that "our bickering and squabbling and fighting was over" (R. 837–838). The court also said that by "if we play the game right," Blagden meant "only living up to the license agreement * * *" (R. 4111). Cf. R. 864–865. The court made no reference whatever to Blagden's later explicit statement, above quoted, that he also meant "Stabilizing the prices in the industry." Blagden was not impeached as a witness; nor was his testimony inconsistent or contradicted in any way. The court's failure to consider Blagden's entire testimony, therefore, gravely impugns the accuracy of the court's treatment of the evidence on this point.

[10] On January 1927, Griswold wrote Avery (Ex. 132, R. 5285):

"You will remember that I started out to deliver 100 percent of the manufacturers of board that would be willing to sign up on a license arrangement with your company which at that time only extended during the life of the Utzman

Haggerty "admitted being personally sold on the proposition." He also wrote that he would like to receive two copies of the Beaver contract when it was drafted because he wanted to forward one to the Texas Cement Plaster Company with any comments he desired to make on it. He concluded that, "It would be very nice if this matter could come up at the next meeting of the Industries, which is on July 13th and 14th" (Ex. 106, R. 5262).[11]

Avery, in acknowledging the letter, thanked Griswold for the information it contained and stated that, "I shall be pleased to send you the two copies of the contract you suggest as soon as it is drawn * * *. It seems reasonable to me that the contract should take form in plenty of patents and at a meeting that was held all of the manufacturers seemed to feel favorable to the matter. * * *"

On cross-examination Griswold testified that he was not asked by Avery to contact other manufacturers and that he had no "agreement" with Avery to do so and that he was not an "agent" of Avery's (R. 716, 691). However, as will appear, Avery knew of and approved of Griswold's activities. Moreover, in answer to a question propounded by the court as to what Avery said about industry-wide licenses, Griswold testified, "Well, as I remember, it was that he insisted at that time, or stated that he wanted them all to come in, * * *" (R. 620). This was uncontradicted testimony of an unimpeached witness.

[11] Griswold testified that Texas, which had either just entered or was proposing to enter the board business, knew of the suit against Beaver, and he wanted to show Texas "what had been done, if there had been anything, in the way of a settlement, or a proposed settlement, so that if he wanted to do likewise he could do so" (R. 545).

time for the consideration of those interested when they are here at the Industries meeting on the thirteenth and fourteenth". (Ex. 107, R. 5263).

On August 17, 1926, Griswold wrote Avery, "Do not think I am not working on the matter about which we have had some correspondence," and added that he was to see Haggerty of National and possibly Mr. Brown of Certain-teed Products shortly, and would report to Avery thereafter (Ex. 112, R. 5268). On August 31, 1926, Griswold reported to Avery that he had had an interview with Haggerty and also had met Fuller of Atlantic which proposed to enter the industry, adding (Ex. 113, R. 5269), "Had a very pleasant talk with him along the lines we are working on and expect another interview with him in the very near future." This interview with Fuller and Channing of Atlantic Gypsum took place early in October. Griswold wrote Avery (Ex. 121, R. 5276), "I have talked very earnestly to them on the matter of the licensing agreement and believe they will consider it favorably."[12] He also requested a copy of the license contract to forward [12] Griswold testified that he had advised Atlantic to make a closed type edge, providing "they could reach an agreement with Mr. Avery," but that he had done nothing after October 1926 until Atlantic signed up "by way of inducing or attempting to induce either Atlantic or USG to enter into a contract with one another" (R. 712, 713). The trial court's inference from this evidence (R. 4038) that Griswold had nothing of importance to do with bringing Atlantic into the combination ignores his testimony as to his activities prior to October 1926.

to Fuller and Channing (Ex. 121). Avery sent Griswold a copy of the license for Fuller and Channing stating, "If you believe it advisable to forward it on to them I would be pleased to have you do it" (Ex. 122, R. 5277).

Griswold acknowledged the letter on October 15, 1926, stating he was of the opinion that it would be a wise move to forward the contract to Fuller with a request that the matter be kept confidential. He added, "I might advise you that the Directors of this Company had a meeting Monday of this week, and the License Agreement matter was referred back to a Committee. This Committee expects to meet with all other manufacturers of board who have not yet signed the License Agreement. The meeting will probably be Thursday of this coming week with the object in view of getting united action on this matter" (Ex. 123, R. 5278). In reply Avery wrote Griswold on October 19, 1926 (Ex. 124, R. 5279):

> I am glad to have the information this contains, and will be interested in hearing from you after the meeting that you expect to have with all other manufacturers of the board who have not so far signed the license agreement.[13] Regardless of the outcome of your efforts in this particular, I > want to assure you of my appreciation not only of your interest but of the broad-visioned manner with which you have proceeded with this important subject.

On the same day Avery also wrote Blagden of the proposed meeting and added, "While I will admit to being a little disappointed in the loss of time on this matter, I do fully appreciate the very intelligent treatment that Mr. Griswold gives to this subject, and have confidence that his plans will be wise and influential. I do not know whether you expect to be a part of this meeting, but I hope so" (Ex. 191, R. 5351). Avery's letter was written less than three weeks after Blagden had written Avery about the "entente cordial" in the industry (Ex. 189, R. 5349).

Subsequently Griswold regretfully advised Avery that as some of the people interested could not be present at the selected time the group meeting would have to be postponed until after the first of November 1926. He assured Avery that "All of them have expressed the desire to come as soon as they can arrange their affairs to do so" and added that Atlantic "is very much interested" (Ex. 125, R. 5280). He also added:

> I am quite sure you appreciate what I have to contend with and also appreciate the fact that if the original plan should fail of unanimous consent of all of the manufacturers, and if the other deal about which you are familiar should materialize, it would still leave the way open to bring the matter to a head in a much easier way. I am quite sure that one or the other will succeed by patient and persistent work.[14]

The combined efforts of Griswold and Blagden were unsuccessful. On November 16, 1926, Griswold wrote Avery (Ex. 128, R. 5282):

> After spending considerable time with the manufacturers of Wall and Plaster Board, discussing the proposed license agreement submitted by your company, I am now compelled to admit that further efforts would simply be a waste of time and that it would be impossible to get them to sign this agreement as written. The principal objection is the length of time which the agreement runs and the list of patents described as exhibit A, acknowledgment of the validity of which is required according to the present agreement. You will remember that when the matter was first up for discussion it was figured that the length of time which the agreement was to run was to be much shorter, as the Utzman Patent expired in about three years.
> I have discussed this matter pretty thoroughly with all of the companies with the exception of the Certainteed Products Com> pany. I am not in a position to know where they would stand on a contract that only covered the Utzman Patent and run during the life of the Utzman Patent which is about three years. I expect to see them in a short time but I feel confident that all of the rest of the manufacturers will sign such an agreement along the same general lines of your present agreement. I also believe that the Atlantic Gypsum Company who are figuring on going into the Wall Board business will sign such an agreement, but know they will object to an agreement running practically ten years. I expect to be able to report to you in a short time exactly what they are willing to do.

[14] The "other deal" was Griswold's plan to merge with American a number of the smaller companies such as Niagara, Empire, Ebsary, Atlantic, and Texas, all of whom would then be operating under the proposed American license from USG (R. 567–571, R. 703–714). Avery knew of this plan (R. 5279, 567–571).

Avery refused, however, to offer an alternative form of license. On November 22, 1926, he wrote Griswold "I appreciate your efforts with the other board manufacturers. I understand your statement of their position, and regret that we have no alternative to offer" (Ex. 129, R. 5283).

B. The conspiracy in 1927

Griswold's failure to induce all other manufacturers to enter into a license arrangement with USG in 1926 did not discourage him. On January 3, 1927, Griswold wrote Avery (Ex. 132, R. 5283):

> Am very sorry indeed that we have not been able to reach an adjustment in the matter referred to not only with this Company but all the other people interested > and regret to note that you feel as you do about the matter but am frank to say to you I have not given it up.

> You will remember that I started out to deliver 100 percent of the manufacturers of board that would be willing to sign up on a license arrangement with your company which at that time only extended during the life of the Utzman patents and at a meeting that was held all of the manufacturers seemed to feel favorable to the matter * * *.

Griswold then stated that, "Since the meeting referred to the Certainteed Products Company began the manufacture of * * * an open edge type of board" and is "doing just what I anticipated would be done in case this license agreement was not entered into." Griswold undoubtedly was referring to the admitted fact that late in 1926 Certain-teed commenced the manufacture of open-edge board and sold it at a differential below the price of closed-edge board (R. 243, 281).

Then, following the practice initiated in 1926, Griswold went on to report in the same letter concerning the attitude of other manufacturers with reference to license agreements, stating (Ex. 132, R. 5285–5286):

> With the exception of the Certainteed Products Company and the possible change of mind of the National Gypsum Company every other manufacturer now is ready to > enter into a shorter term contract. The Certainteed Company are considering the matter but have not given me a definite answer. If their actions are favorable every manufacturer will then be ready to enter into a shorter time contract which will be along the same general lines of your present contract and if I am successful in getting 100 percent the proposition will be submitted to you for consideration. As indicated above, at the present time, every concern including the Atlantic Gypsum Company is willing to enter into this contract with the exception of the Certainteed Products Company. The National Gypsum Company has so indicated but suggested one or two alternate propositions which I think they would waive providing all the rest of the manufacturers agreed on the proposed contract.

Griswold followed this letter with another written on January 31, 1927, in which he stated (Ex. 133, R. 5286): "I wish to advise that all of the manufacturers of Wall Board have now given me a final answer as to their attitude covering the license agreement with you," and advised Avery that he would be ready to meet with him at the earliest possible date. Avery wrote in answer (Ex. 134, R. 5287), "I gather from your communication that the position of the wall board interests with whom you have conferred is of the nature you indicated in your former letters," and concluded that although he could hold out no encouragement to Griswold, he would be pleased to see him and discuss the matter. Apparently Avery, like Griswold, had not given up hope that an industry-wide license agreement could be negotiated. Certainly this letter did not close the door to further negotiations.

Griswold conferred with Avery with reference to the license agreement (Ex. 149, R. 5299). A few days later Griswold advised Gloyd of Texas of the conference.[15] Thereafter, between February 17, 1927, and April 13, 1927, Griswold and Gloyd communicated with each other concerning the license agreement. Gloyd expressed a willingness to become a licensee of USG (Ex. 149, R. 5299). Griswold then advised Gloyd that Atlantic "is considering signing up with him [Avery] on a long time contract and Williams of the National Gypsum Company seems to be inclined to sign up on a long time contract. Reeb [Niagara Gypsum Company] is also considering it favorable" (sic) (Ex. 150, R. 5300).

Gloyd replied that "if the folded edge business comes up again with Mr. Avery you can count [15] It will be recalled that as early as June 2, 1926, Griswold advised Avery that he was anxious to obtain from Avery a copy of the USG-Beaver license contract to send to Gloyd (Ex. 106, R. 5262, supra, p. 26). In this connection, it is of interest that Griswold wrote Gloyd at a later date that, "I have you in mind at all times when I am talking with Avery * * *" (Ex. 152).

us in line" (Ex. 151, R. 5301). Griswold then wrote Gloyd, "Atlantic Gypsum Company have signed up their contract with the United States Gypsum Company" (Ex. 152, R. 5302). Gloyd replied that he had definitely "decided to apply to Mr. Avery right away for a license" (Ex. 153, R. 5303). Griswold replied expressing the belief that he was positive Gloyd would have no difficulty in securing the license from USG (Ex. 155, R. 5304), and at the same time Griswold advised Gloyd of the attitude of National. Griswold wrote (Ex. 155, R. 5305):

> It may interest you to know that I had an interview with the National people while in Chicago the other day, and when discussing the subject, they seemed to be thinking more favorably than they ever did, [and] I am expecting them to arrive at a conclusion when they discuss the matter further with Mr. Avery.

A week earlier, on March 24, 1927, Griswold had written to Williams of National, in part, as follows (Ex. 136B, R. 5289):

> I have not had the pleasure of hearing from you since discussing the board proposition with you in Buffalo and I suppose Mr. Haggerty is home, as he expected to be in a few days.
> I am very glad to inform you that the Texas Cement Plaster Company decided recently to enter into the license agreement with the United States Gypsum Company, but I am still further pleased to advise you that since they reached that decision, they have reached the decision to join in our proposition so that they will become one of the group which we are merging. The Atlantic Gypsum Company signed up their agreement and the Certainteed Products Company are considering it with much greater favor. I would like to urge upon you to discuss the matter with Mr. Haggerty, because our organization, when we get lined up, will soon reach an agreement, which, if the Certainteed comes in, and I am sure they will, will make it 100% with all manufacturers who will be operating under the license agreement[16] and will do away with the legal [16] In the opinion below the district court referred to "our proposition" and "make it 100%" as they appear in this letter (Ex. 136B), and drew the inference that Griswold was speaking solely with reference to his "contemplated merger" (R. 4113). While this may have been true of "our proposition," it was clearly not so as to the phrase "make it 100%." It is clear that Griswold at no time had in mind that Certainteed, referred to in the same sentence, would join his merger. The only reasonable construction of what Griswold meant, therefore, when he said "make it 100%," is that all companies would then be parties to the license arrangement. In fact, he says plainly that "if the Certainteed comes in" that "will make it 100% with all manufacturers who will be operating under the license agreement * * *" (Ex. 136B).

The court's further inference that Griswold's use of "united action" in Ex. 123, supra, p. 28, and "deliver 100 complications which have existed in the past and which are so unpleasant as well as expensive.

Meanwhile, during this period Blagden continued to be busy in promoting the idea of an industry-wide license arrangement. A letter written by Griswold stated (Ex. 157, R. 5306) that "Mr. Avery, who has been opposed to granting them [Certain-teed [redacted]] a license, has finally yielded to the persuasion of Mr. Blagden, Mr. Palmer and myself and has consented to consider their application."

Despite the attempt to persuade all nonlicensees to become licensees, only two price-fixing license agreements were entered into during 1927, i. e., the USG-Atlantic and the USG-Texas licenses (R. 6289), both of which were substantially idenper cent" in Ex. 132, supra, pp. 25, 31, also referred solely to his merger is manifestly erroneous. There is nothing whatever in these exhibits, or in the testimony concerning them, to justify any other construction than that Griswold was referring to "united action" under the license arrangement, and not to his proposed merger.

The trial court, further, failed completely to appreciate that, had Griswold been successful in his merger plans, it was his intention that the merged company would itself take a license with USG. His merger plan was, therefore, not inconsistent with the plan "to deliver 100 per cent of the manufacturers of board that would be willing to sign up on a license arrangement" (Ex. 132, R. 5285), but was in fact an alternative means by which that might be accomplished. The record is clear beyond possibility of misconstruction on this point (R. 567–571).

During 1926 and for several years prior thereto the price of board had been fairly stable (R. 571–572). However, every witness conversant with the facts testified that, beginning in 1927, board and plaster prices became increasingly demoralized (R. 572–573, 654, 902, 940–941, 2488–2489, 2527, 3573, 1329–1330, and 1390). Griswold testified that some of the "independent manufacturers" were quoting lower prices "on certain types of board"; that one of these independent manufacturers, Certain-teed, offered open-edge board "at quite a low price"; that to meet this competition, other manufacturers started selling culls of covered-edge board; that the price of No. 1 open-edge board "was disturbed to a certain extent"; and there was "quite a lot" of the open-edge board sold "at a lower price" (R. 572–573). Actually, Henning's report to the board of directors of USG showed a considerably more aggravated condition, and one which was giving USG great concern (R. 6380, 6385, 6396, 6402, 6409, and 6415). For example, Henning's report for 1927 contained the following (Ex. 619, R. 6403):

> The competitive conditions outlined in my last report have become more keen and aggravated. The price conditions anticipated and the price declines recommended > are now a reality. There is not a commodity nor an area which is not now highly competitive. Prices in some areas have gravitated as low as cost. Following our recommendation in our last report, we are meeting any price made by any competitor on any commodity in order to hold and increase our establishment. It was necessary on January 20 to announce a reduction of $5.00 per thousand on Sheetrock to meet price concessions and lower prices offered by our competitors. It was also necessary to introduce and offer a subgrade board—Crown Wallboard—at a mill price of $20.00 per thousand, or ten dollars less than our regular Sheetrock price. This drastic policy of price decline was absolutely necessary in order to stabilize the market and to make it possible for us to meet competitive conditions.[17]

The Sheetrock referred to by Henning was the standard No. 1 closed-edge board which USG had sold for many years at $30 per thousand (Ex. 616, R. 6382). Had USG and other companies not introduced a lower grade board, it is obvious that the price of Sheetrock and comparable boards

[17] The court found (Fdg. 60, R. 4155), "The gypsum industry in the 'Eastern area' was in a demoralized condition in the years 1927–1929. There was litigation, bad feeling, price cutting. The prices of board had fallen so low that for some manufacturers business was no longer profitable. Prices could not go down and business continue; any change would, as a matter of economic necessity, be upward."

would have been further depressed by the competition of the open-edge board made by Certainteed and other nonlicensees.

Griswold testified that he favored industry-wide licensing to eliminate the competition of other types of board. He stated (R. 574):

> Q. Was this competition between the No. 2 Board, and the open-edge board, and the No. 1 Board, and the variance in prices, was that one reason why you favored the license agreements, to eliminate competition?
> A. Well, I figured that if these people elected to take out a license, naturally they would want to manufacture the best board they could, which it was pretty universally recognized was this closed edge type board; and if they did that, naturally that would have a tendency to eliminate these other boards from the market because they were only put out to compete with and raise a disturbance, as a rule.[18]

[18] In Fdg. 56, R. 4154, the trial court found: "There were no informal side agreements between USG and any of its licensees or between any of the defendants herein that they would discontinue making open-edge board or seconds of closed-edge board, or that USG would advance and stabilize the prices for board, or that all or any of the companies would increase their prices for other gypsum products * * *." Griswold's testimony, supra, and the other evidence to be discussed herein, leaves no doubt that all parties fully understood that industry-wide adoption of the license agreements would bring about all of the results mentioned in Fdg. 56. Moreover, such results in fact followed the signing of the agreements in 1929. Cf. Fdg. 60.

C. The conspiracy in 1928

On January 20, 1928, Certain-teed purchased the assets of Beaver (R. 1441–1442). Certain-teed was then making an open-edge board at its Texas mill and selling this board in competition with closed-edge board at $12 per thousand in all areas of the United States except the central area, where the price was $15 (Ex. 620, R. 6411). At that time Beaver was making a closed-edge board under a price-fixing license from USG. Certain-teed refused to assume this license and pay a royalty on its open-edge board as the USG-Beaver license required (R. 41). On February 23, 1928, USG instituted suit in the District Court of the United States in Illinois against Certain-teed and Beaver asserting that Certain-teed should be required to assume all liabilities of Beaver under its license agreement and seeking an injunction against the distribution of the proceeds of the sale to the Beaver stockholders (Ex. 321, R. 5874, Ex. 323, R. 5876). Certain-teed was required to post a million dollar bond, or otherwise suffer a temporary injunction, as security for damages which might be found to be due USG (Fdg. 9, R. 4136). Certain-teed therefore commenced making an open-edge board at all of its Beaver plants (R. 282).

On February 29, 1928, Avery, Blagden and George M. Brown of Certain-teed met in Chicago to discuss the questions raised by the suit (R.

1442). Brown testified that he "got nowhere" in his meeting with Avery (R. 1438) but, he wrote in a memorandum of this conference (Ex. 212, R. 5376):

> The attitude of the U. S. Gypsum Company at the meeting yesterday was firmly in favor of a closed agreement until 1937 although the main patent runs out next year and, so far as we know, any patent situation thereafter would be very flimsy and probably would not justify any benefits of any kind.

With reference to the suit filed by USG, Brown wrote in this memorandum (Ex. 212):

> Working along these lines we must prepare to answer the suit of the U. S. Gypsum Company. We should appear as a party to it and we should claim what we believe to be true, that the suit is filed not in the interest of royalties but for the sole purpose of trade domination and monopoly and price control—all of which mean far more than the total of royalty could possibly mean. Our Company has been selling an open edge board entirely satisfactory to our trade at much lower prices than we would have been permitted to sell closed edge board but we have been able to reach the Southwest trade only. They are determined, if possible, to prevent our extending like opportunities to our Eastern trade. We have offered to continue a royalty basis on the Beaver Board plants and even to include our Texas Plant during the life of the patent, with the possibility of continuing thereafter. This is all they could fairly ask under any conditions. It is more than they were entitled to but their determination to gather in a monopoly, if possible, leads them to risk everything for such domination because of the big rewards possible, if they can succeed. It is not the matter of royalty in any sense that is of importance.

In accordance with these convictions, the answer filed by Certain-teed on March 14, 1928, alleged that the license agreements which had been entered into with USG and the suits which had been filed by USG were not for the purpose of securing royalties to USG but for the purpose of restraining competition; that the purpose of requiring the payment of royalties on unpatented board was to prevent the manufacture and sale of the competing open-edge board; and that the purpose of the suit against Certain-teed was to "prevent this defendant from increasing its manufacture and sale of 'open-edge' wallboard and becoming an even stronger competitor of complainant in the wallboard business" (Ex. 324, R. 5947–5948).

Griswold met with George M. Brown on or about April 12, 1928. He testified that Brown's attitude was (R. 604): "As I remember it, Mr. Brown at that time stated that if all of the other manufacturers, or certain ones of them, took out a license, he might possible consider it, but he felt that his competitors, especially since Ebsary and the Certain-teed Products were pretty hot competitors in that territory, he felt they should both be licensed."

Blagden, who was still active in promoting industry-wide licensing, had one or more conferences concerning them with Avery about this time. On April 12, 1928, Griswold wrote McCrady, president of American, that Blagden had contacted him, and added (Ex. 141, R. 5292):

> * * * that inasmuch as he [Blagden] and I had done as much or more work than anybody else on the license agreement between the Wall Board manufacturers and the U. S. G. Company some time ago, the result of which the Beaver Products Company, the Universal Company, the Texas Cement Plaster Company and the Atlantic Gypsum Company had entered into a license agreement with the U. S. G. Company, that he in the last two or three weeks had had one or more conferences with Avery of the U. S. G. Company and he had also talked to his own people, the principal of which is George M. Brown, President of the Certainteed Products Company, and it was his own personal opinion that if The American Gypsum Company, the National Gypsum Company, the Ebsary Gypsum Company and the Niagara Gypsum Company would all get together and agree and then some of us talk to George M. Brown, President of the Certainteed Products, it was his opinion that Mr. Brown would agree to join us, and he felt pretty sure that Brown would join.

You remember I reported when I was in New York I had a two and one-half hour conference with Brown, at which time he stated very plainly to me that they were willing at that time to enter into a license agreement without any particular changes in it providing all of the manufacturers, including Ebsary, would enter into it and make it one hundred percent.

When I was in Chicago about ten days ago I saw Avery for a few minutes and I was given to understand by him that notwithstanding the fact they had an injunction suit against the Certainteed Products Company to try to make them carry out the Beaver Products Company's license agreement, the U. S. G. was willing to drop the suit against the Certainteed providing the Certainteed would carry out the Beaver Products Company's contract. Of course, we have got to make allowance to the fact that Blagden is now connected with the Certainteed Products Company and he may be acting as Brown's spokesman in this case, it really being the object of the Certainteed Products Company to get matters fixed up again and the markets stabilized.

Griswold concluded his letter (Ex. 141, R. 5292) as follows:

For your information will say that the Wall Plaster market will never be straightened up or stabilized providing the Wall Board and Gypsum Lath market remains in the condition it is. There is no question but that if the Wall Board market were fixed up the Wall Plaster market would automatically be affected at the same time. Blagden was very anxious to know what our position in the matter would be and I told him that I could not tell him until sometime about the middle of the coming week. He seems very anxious to get at the matter at once, because he thot if it could be done now, before the market gets to the extreme bottom like it is in the south-west territory where plaster is selling for $2.50 a ton, it would probably be much easier to get it fixed up than it would be when matters get worse."[19]

In addition to contacting Griswold and suggesting to him that a committee of manufacturers call on Brown, Blagden conferred with Brown concerning the license agreement. He testified [19] Griswold testified that along about this time he had a conversation with Avery in which they discussed whether or not a stable price on board would have an effect upon the price of plaster. His testimony was (R. 622):

"I would say that we probably exchanged views on the possibility of that being the case, because that naturally would follow, that if prices on one of the principal products of a company were at a fairly remunerative basis, and had been changed to that basis, and another article they sold was sold below the cost of manufacture, it was natural to figure that it would influence to a certain extent the lower prices, that a man wouldn't be trying to make all of his money on one product he was selling, and giving the other one away."

that he advised Brown to take a license from USG, and explained to him the benefits of such a license. He explained to Brown that he could not afford to make a board without a closed edge, that the cost was prohibitive, and that the closed-edge board was a superior product. He further testified as follows (R. 831):

> Q. Did you talk to him about stabilizing prices under a license agreement?
>
> A. I told him that, undoubtedly, if he were in with the others he would get the benefit of stabilization.
>
> Q. By "stabilization" what do you mean?
>
> A. Stable prices.
>
> Q. And by "stable prices" do you mean uniform prices?
> A. He would get the benefit of the license price, which would be the same price.

In 1928, Holland, a newcomer to the gypsum industry, became president of Universal. Despite the fact that Universal had been a licensee of USG since 1926, Holland in 1928 became extremely active in promoting industry-wide licensing (R. 916). Sometime prior to September 10, 1928, Holland had written to Griswold and Griswold replied advising Holland as to American's attitude (Ex. 144, R. 5295). Holland testified (R. 897–898):

> Q. Do you know of any reason why Mr. Griswold would write this letter to you, sir?

A. Well, at that time I would have liked to have had everybody making closed-edge board, and I think probably, or that you might, have suggested to Mr. Griswold to take a license similar to ours with the United States Gypsum Company.

* * * * *

Q. Why did you want to see everyone making closed-edge board?

A. Well, that was a better board. Wallboard generally would get a black eye where it was sold with an open edge. That would be one reason, just a sound business reason.

The open-edge board usually sold for less than the closed-edge board, and yet, as you were meeting competitive prices, you would never know for sure whether you were meeting the price on an open-edge or a closed-edge board, and I thought it would be beneficial to the industry to have the people making one kind of board.

Holland replied to Griswold's letter, stating (Ex. 145, R. 5296):

In the second paragraph of your letter of September 10 you state you believe that possibly your company could be interested in a modified license agreement on closed edge wallboard. I wish you would give me definite information, if you care to, as to just what your idea of this license agreement should be, stating clearly all of the points you think should be covered. I would not expect to use this information received from you other than as a background in approaching this whole situation when the proper time comes.

I think Mr. Haggerty and others interested are still of the opinion that some time in the near future I should attempt to arrange a meeting; in order to be in a position to intelligently handle the situation I should have a very definite idea from everyone involved as to just what they hope to accomplish in such a meeting.

Griswold replied implying USG was not sufficiently interested in securing a stabilized market to make concessions. He stated (Ex. 146, R. 5297):

There apparently is no question but that the other manufacturers would all welcome better market conditions, but such conditions cannot be brought about without the U. S. Gypsum Company wanting better market conditions and being willing to make an attempt to improve conditions themselves. So far as I know they have not shown any indications up to the present time that they cared for better market conditions. Conditions are settling down to what might be quite a siege in warfare. Everybody is getting ready to hang out as long as they can, and hoping, of course, that it will not be long before an armistice of some kind is agreed upon and the warfare ended.

Holland answered on September 20, 1928, stating (Ex. 147, R. 5298):

> I am afraid that nothing can be done toward stabilization until the board matter is entirely out of the way. I believe that Mr. Avery has been very definite in a statement to that effect. Inasmuch as Certain-teed, National, and others are unwilling to negotiate any on the board proposition until your decision is clearly defined, it would seem that the entire matter rests with your decision.
> Possibly you are better able to negotiate this yourself, but several of us have thought that maybe we could get farther by having a meeting of several representatives of firms who are involved in the board situation. It might at least be worth while trying, and such a meeting would at least result in finding out just exactly wherein the difference of opinion exists. I was in hopes that you would be in a position to attend such a meeting in case the others were so disposed. If any change takes place in your position, I would be very glad to be informed if you so desire.

On October 11, 1928, a meeting was held attended by Holland and representatives of other companies which had not yet signed an agreement. Black of American reported what took place as follows (Ex. 203, R. 5367.):[20]

[20] Black was called as a witness, identified the letter, Ex. 203, and confirmed that the meeting was held. The force of the exhibit was not impaired upon cross-examination. (R. 1353.)

Referring to the conferences in New York, the following gentlemen were asked to go to Mr. Ebsary's room Monday evening: Mr. Holland, president of the Universal Gypsum Company, Mr. Reeb, Mr. Haggerty, Mr. Baker—a little later on Mr. Walker and Mr. Warren Henley of Certain-teed arrived.

Mr. Ebsary is exceedingly anxious to have something done to straighten things up, and I noticed that Mr. Haggerty and Mr. Baker also seemed considerably more anxious than they were thirty days ago. It seems that Mr. Ebsary had passed the word around that the President of the Certain-teed would be present at the meeting in New York, but Mr. Walker announced that Mr. Brown had started that day on a week's vacation but in case it was decided to have a meeting in Chicago this week, he thought that Mr. Brown would be pleased to return and attend the meeting. It was then decided I was to get in touch with you and see whether or not it was convenient for you to come to New York on the following day and I, of course, reported to them, after talking with you, it was not convenient for you to be in New York this week, but that you would meet the above mentioned gentlemen in Chicago some day next week in order to call on Mr. Avery, if such an action was decided upon.

After the meeting on Tuesday, Mr. Ebsary asked the same gentlemen to go over to the Certainteed Office, and Mr. Walker, in particular, and supported by Mr. Holland, took the same position they did the day before, that everyone must be very sure before going to Chicago that they were willing to walk up and sign up a license agreement with the U. S. G., and also to foot the bill whatever it may be. He also stated that he was very sure that their Mr. Brown would not be willing to take out a license agreement with the U. S. G. on board unless it carried with it a general cleaning up of unsatisfactory conditions of all gypsum products.

It was very apparent that the Certainteed, as well as Mr. Holland of the Universal, were trying to get every one present to commit himself to practically do whatever the U. S. G. would dictate, and Mr. Walker said that Mr. Brown would be glad to use his efforts to get the U. S. G. to make the back royalty payments, if there were any, of the National and ourselves as low as possible. As you know, the Universal people are already operating on the U. S. G. license on board, and it seemed to me that Mr. Holland was mainly a representative of the U. S. G., and I am inclined to think that he reports everything in detail that goes on at these sessions to Mr. Avery. My part, of course, was to listen and report to you, and I made it very plain that all decisions regarding these matters rested with you.

Shortly after this meeting in Mr. Ebsary's room, representatives of National had further conferences with representatives of USG concerning a license agreement, as a result of which the board of directors of National adopted the following resolution on November 27, 1928 (Ex. 197, R. 5355):

> The President related in detail the occurrences in connection with the meetings held in Chicago recently in the matter of license agreement on plaster wallboard, and on motion of Mr. Borer, seconded by Mr. Currie, it was
> "Resolved, That the proper officials of the CORPORATION be and they hereby are authorized and directed to take such action as regards entering a license agreement with the United States Gypsum Company on plaster wallboard as they may see fit."

The demoralization of the price structure which was under way in 1927 continued in an even more aggravated manner throughout 1928. Henning of USG reported in 1928 as follows (Ex. 620, R. 6411, 6412, 6414):

> Plasterboard—* * * Competition is now offering cut stock bundled plasterboard at $10.00 to $12.50 mill. However, we have not as yet reduced any prices on Rocklath, but are still holding the same $15.00 price. We are meeting competitive board with our own bundled cut stock. * * *
> All wallboard—* * *

We are endeavoring to maintain a differential of $5.00 between Sheetrock and Crown and Sterling board and have been successful in holding 65% of the footage on Sheetrock for the first 6 months; however, for the month of July this percentage has been reduced to 48%.

Due to Certain-teed's activities, who are now offering wallboard for $12.00 in all areas except the central area where they are on a $15.00 price, Crown has gravitated to $14.00 and $16.00 which was necessary to hold establishment and get tonnage. With the wide spread between $14.00 on Crown and $25.00 on Sheetrock, making a $11.00 differential, it has been necessary during July to drop the price of Sheetrock in order to hold Sheetrock in the markets. In these areas we are now quoting Crown at $14.00 against Certain-teed's $12.00 board and holding Sheetrock at $18.00 and the same applies proportionally where other prices on Certain-teed prevail. We look for further declines both in Sheetrock and Crown prices with increased tonnage and establishment.

General—Competition is more aggressive than last quarter and there is no market on any of our materials. We are trying to sell all products at a differential above our competitors' prices and are making a consistent effort to hold Sheetrock rather than sell Crown, however, losing no establishment or footage on account of price. * * *

D. The conspiracy in 1929

On January 7, 1929, Holland wrote Haggerty, of National, stating (Ex. 204, R. 5369):

> I wonder if you have had any talk with Mr. Kling [of American] regarding the settlement of litigation between his company and the U. S. Gypsum Co. I have heard indirectly that they are committed among themselves to a settlement but that they have hopes of reducing the amount involved by delaying the time of settlement.
>
> It is my opinion that we should make an effort to hold another meeting of those interested in the board situation. Mr. Kling surely should consider the others involved to the extent of at least letting us know what they propose to do so that yourself and others could be governed accordingly.[21]
> Rather than initiate the move again myself, it would probably carry more weight if you and Mr. Brown would request me [21] The trial court in its summary of Exhibit 204 omitted reference to this part of Holland's letter (R. 4103). But it was important to Holland that American should reach a decision so that the others "could be governed accordingly." In other words, the true import of the letter is that unless all, or substantially all, of the industry should sign up under the licenses, prices would become still further demoralized, and Holland wished to avoid that.

> to call such a meeting. Personally, I cannot see how the American can hope to gain anything at all by delaying the settlement because of the fact this delay is going to be the cause of demoralizing prices during most of 1929 unless the situation is handled promptly.

The implication of the second paragraph of this letter that each license was not a separate and isolated transaction is supported by Holland's testimony. He testified that "I hoped that other board manufacturers would take out a closed-edge license, take out a license on the closed-edge patent," * * * that "I think I kept trying to talk these people into taking out a license," * * * and "I imagine that I talked to all of them" (R. 931–932).

Haggerty wrote Holland in reply on January 9, 1929 (Ex. 205, R. 5370):

> When I was in New York Saturday, I had a few minutes with Kling and took the occasion to very pointedly question him on his attitude toward the license agreement. He told me very definitely that they had decided to stay out and I, personally, am willing to accept that as a conclusion.
> The question now in my mind is whether or not the other four board makers, who are outside the license agreement, feel that it would be advantageous to go in without the American Gypsum Company. It would seem to me that the chief value in a meeting would be to discuss that point.

As far as we are concerned, there is one question that has come up in my discussion of the subject with some of our directors: and I have not been able to answer it satisfactorily. It is this. At the present time, the United States Gypsum Company is naturally unwilling to discuss price, but would feel free to do so under the license agreement because of the price control feature which, as I understand it, gives them that right. If this price control feature was discontinued in August, as is the case in the present form of the agreement, how could we expect the cooperation of the United States Gypsum Company in anything bearing upon a discussion of prices? Would not their position then be exactly what it is now, and rightly so?

If this assumption is correct, then is not the price control feature during the eight-year period of very vital importance, provided it can be worked out, and what is the conclusion of the United States Gypsum Company on that phase of the matter?

My talk with Kling was so brief that I did not have a chance to discuss the reason for his conclusion, but I do recall that the objection he made to the present form of license agreement, when I talked the matter over with him in Atlantic City, was that there was no price control beyond next August, when the Utzman patent expires.

I would like to hear from you if you care to let me have your opinion before determining our interest in attending another meeting, particularly if Kling does not recede from his present attitude.

It will be noted that while Haggerty, like Holland, was interested in the position that American was going to take concerning the license, he was probably much more disturbed about the manner in which prices could be controlled after the Utzman patent expired on August 6, 1929. Holland promptly replied on January 12, 1929, stating (Ex. 206, R. 5371):

I am inclined to think that the matter of future prices is not the deciding factor in the attitude of the American Gypsum Company on the wallboard proposition. You will remember that Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available and we were all agreed that the fact that the Utzman patent expires next August is not a practical reason for continuing the conflict.

It is my opinion that if you and the others interested in the settlement of the wallboard controversy bring enough pressure to bear on the American crowd that something can be done. You will remember that Mr. Kling stated several times that they would be materially influenced by the attitude of the other men involved and I believe we should make an effort to hold him to this idea. I am quite sure that Mr. Avery would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included.[22] However, if after conferring with Mr. Brown and Mr. Reeb it is thought advisable that this should be done, I would be willing to make an effort to bring this about.

I am expecting to be East next week, at which time I will talk further with Mr. Brown and will communicate with you later as to his ideas. In the meantime, if you have any new information I will be glad to hear from you.

[22] The trial court referred to Exhibit 206 (R. 4104), but omitted entirely two very significant points: (1) it made no mention of the second sentence that "Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there was other patents available * * *," and (2) no mention likewise was made of the statement that "Mr. Avery would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included." After omitting these sentences, the trial court stated that it is clear that Exhibit 204 and Exhibit 206 "have no reference to an alleged USG plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses" (R. 4114). On the contrary, it is submitted, the plain import of these exhibits, when read in their entirety, is that there was a very definite "plan" afoot to bring the entire gypsum industry under licenses for the purpose of stabilizing prices. In fact, Holland said unequivocally in Exhibit 206 that there was a "plan," and the inference is

Holland was asked to explain the meaning of the language used in this letter. His answers for the most part consisted of a series of "I don't know's" or "I don't remember's" (R. 937–943). He did testify, however, that he wrote truthful letters (R. 938–939):

> Q. I see. Well, again I want to say that I am not casting any aspersions on your truthfulness, and I don't want you to think that the next question does, but I want to ask you—did you write truthful letters?
>
> The WITNESS. Well, I will answer the question this way, that I always try to write truthful letters.
> Q. And your statement there that "Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utz-irresistible that the plan was for the industry to take out licenses under the Utzman patent, or some other, in order to stabilize prices. The trial court's treatment of this evidence is entirely without basis.

The court stated further that Holland was interested in helping "his company as well as the other manufacturers out of their unfortunate financial situation due to the litigation and the price war" (R. 4114). That is, Holland wanted the others to join in the "plan" in order to end all price competition in the industry. It is submitted, therefore, that so far from excusing Holland in his activities, the court's statement is in effect an explicit finding that the appellees were engaged in a conspiracy to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices as charged.

man patent that there were other patents available," and so forth—is that a truthful statement?

A. I would think so, yes, sir.[23]

Following this exchange of letters between Holland and Haggerty, on May 14, 1929, the board of directors of National Gypsum Company held a meeting "for the purpose of discussing the license agreement submitted to all the manufacturers of gypsum products in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains by the United States Gypsum Co." (Ex. 198, R. 5356). At this meeting "the Chairman [Mr. Baker] outlined the principal provisions in the contract and stated to the Board that he had been definitely informed that all other manufacturers of gypsum products east of the Rocky Mountains, except the American Gypsum Company, had agreed to sign the license contract in substantially the form as submitted to this [23] The trial court in its opinion made no mention of this part of Holland's testimony, but was at some pains to say that Griswold did not have "any understanding with Avery or anyone else that price control would be extended under some patent after the expiration of the Utzman patent; that he never had any discussion with Avery or anyone else about Avery's finding some patent other than the Utzman patent to give a longer price control * * *". (R. 4115). This testimony of Griswold, who left the industry in 1928, in no way discredited the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of Holland as set forth above.

Board.[24] That a final meeting was to be held in Chicago, Ill., within a week following this date, for final disposition of the license contract, and it is therefore imperative that immediate action be taken by this Board on the proposed contract * * *" (Ex. 198, R. 5356). The board of directors by resolution authorized their officers to execute the proposed contract.

After this meeting of the board of directors of National on May 14, 1929, events moved rather quickly. On May 16, 1929, National signed a license agreement with USG (Ex. 3, R. 4239) and on the following day, May 17, 1929, Baker of National sent the following telegram to Avery (Ex. 716, R. 6521):

[24] The trial court stated that the recitals in Exhibit 198, above quoted, are "equivocal", and hence apparently of no probative value, because "it is no more inferable from these minutes that the various (prospective) licensees had agreed with each other to sign the license contract with USG than it is that they had agreed severally with USG to do so" (R. 4116).

Exhibit 198, as in the case of other exhibits, is not to be disposed of piecemeal, but is to be read in the light of all other evidence in the case. Viewed in the light of the other evidence discussed supra, it is clear that Exhibit 198 means that all manufacturers except American, had finally reached an understanding among themselves that they would take out licenses. In fact, the exhibit itself shows, in a part omitted by the court, that "a final meeting was to be held in Chicago * * * within a week * * * for final disposition of the license." This was the general meeting of May 21, 1929, to be discussed later, which could not have been held except by concerted action. The exhibit, therefore, is not equivocal, but when read realistically shows a concerted plan to which National was a party.

> Our contract signed and in mail Reeb ready Stop We are working with Ebsary with hope of everybody being set by Saturday to justify your calling meeting all board makers Monday if you like.[25]

Upon the receipt of Baker's telegram, Avery immediately wired Gloyd as follows (Ex. 720, R. 6524):

> There has been much discussion of infringement settlement and license on board. Nothing has yet developed although I think it safe to say the outlook is favorable. If license were generally closed it would be desirable to discuss a reasonable market price for the licensed product. Will keep you informed in hope that you may participate if outcome favorable.

[25] The court below (R. 4116), in discussing this telegram (Ex. 716) and other related evidence referred to in the opinion, stated that it is conceded that the May 1929 meeting of licensees and prospective licensees was "prearranged." But the court said this is "not necessarily" evidence that the parties were engaged "in a common plan or enterprise to blanket the entire gypsum industry with licenses and stabilize prices." The court pointed out (1) that each prospective licensee might have gone to Chicago merely to see that one of the others did not get better license terms, and (2) each would "naturally be interested in attending the meeting in order to know whether the others were going to settle with USG." Even Channing of Atlantic, an existing licensee, and presumably Holland of Universal, who also attended, might have gone for the same reasons, in the court's opinion (R. 4117). These inferences, even if true, are not inconsistent with the plain inference that the May meeting was called and everyone was present as part of a plan to organize the industry and stabilize prices.

Before Gloyd answered the above telegram, USG received from American the license contract with material changes in it. Avery again acted promptly and on May 18, 1929, sent identical telegrams to Holland of Universal (Ex. 207, R. 5372), Brown of Certain-teed (Ex. 318, R. 5873), Baker of National (Ex. 725, R. 6526), Ebsary (Ex. 724, R. 6526), and Gloyd (Ex. 721, R. 6524). These telegrams were as follows:

> Mr. Kling has sent in a contract with material changes and declares he will not attend meeting unless these changes are accepted by us Stop We cannot accept them and regret that the Tuesday meeting will be futile unless other companies wish to proceed as outlined without American license.

Gloyd was absent from his place of business when Avery's telegram arrived. He returned on May 20, 1929, and wired Avery that he hoped "all take out license with you on board" (Ex. 722, R. 6524). Upon receipt of Gloyd's wire, Avery wrote him as follows (Ex. 723, R. 6525):

> Thanks for your telegram of May 20. I regret very much that you cannot be with us at the meeting to be held tomorrow, although it does not seem to me that the situation makes it necessary. For the past several months, most of those manufacturing boards and infringing our patents have indicated a readiness to pay damages and to take out a license. The American Gypsum Company, however, have been unwilling to subscribe to the terms, the conditions > in our opinion require. Mr. Brown, Mr. Reeb, Mr. Ebsary, and the National Company have expressed themselves favorable to this adjustment and it is not improbable that the matter may be closed at the meeting tomorrow or soon thereafter. You will, of course, be fully informed of what takes place.

It should be noted that the implication that Certain-teed and Ebsary were infringing is incorrect. Both were manufacturing only open-edge board (R. 1388, 2477).[26]

Avery's expectation "that the matter may be closed at the meeting tomorrow," was correct. A meeting was held at the Palmer House, Chicago, during the period May 21 through 23, 1929. At this meeting there were present one or more representatives of every nonlicensee board manufacturer in the Eastern area, except American and Kelley, and one or more representatives of all existing licensee board manufacturers except the Texas Company. George N. Lenci, vice-president of Ebsary Gypsum Company, attended this meeting and described in some detail just what occurred (R. 2472–2476). Lenci related that when all the manufacturers were assembled in one room on May 21, 1929, Avery made a short statement and "welcomed us as prospective licensees" (R. 2475), and, among other things, stated "that if all companies would take out a license from USG, that that would correct the demoralized condition which the board industry now found itself in" (R. 2476, 2485). Lenci recalled that at some time during the first day of the meeting either Mr. McLeish (counsel for USG), or Mr. Avery, "illustrated their point by saying that under the General Electric case it was permissible for the owner of a patent to fix the price of a patented product" (R. 2794).

[26] The court below in Fdg. 90, R. 1161, found that Texas, Certain-teed, and Ebsary were the only companies that prior to their licenses made open-edge board. This finding is contrary to the admitted facts in the case. The admitted facts are that American and Niagara also manufactured open-edge board prior to their becoming licensees. See answers of USG, (R. 282), Certain-teed (R. 243), Celotex (R. 201), and Ebsary (no denial in answer, R. 164) to paragraph 71 of the complaint (R. 17).

Lenci testified (R. 2967) that the Ebsary Company had decided to become a licensee of USG before going to the May 1929 meeting.[27] He testi-

[27] The lower court found (Fdg. 37, R. 4150), that "the decision to take a license was reached by each of the companies independently" and that, "the licensees took their respective licenses, without regard to what other companies did." The first part of the finding may well be true in a limited sense, that is, that each company had to decide for itself what it would do. Lenci testified that Ebsary had reached a decision before it went out to Chicago. Whittemore testified to the same effect (R. 1398). But the finding that each company acted "without regard to what other companies did" is manifestly and completely erroneous. In the first place Avery was not "interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included" (Ex. 206, R. 5372). In the next place the May meeting was admittedly "prearranged" (R. 4117), and substantially the entire industry attended. Avery, and everyone, recognized that by bringing the whole industry fied that the reasons for this decision were (a) principally that his company desired to make a closed-edge board (R. 2970), and (b) that "we did hear that there would be a price control feature in the license, and that was not unattractive to us" (R. 2970). Two factors warrant doubt as to the importance of the first reason: first, that Ebsary had at no time previously applied to Avery for a license to make a closed-edge board (R. 2967), and second, that in May 1929, when Ebsary took a license, the Utzman patent which related to closed edge board had only some 11 weeks to run, or until August 6, 1929, before it expired. At the very least, however, Lenci's testimony indicates that a substantial reason for Ebsary's actions was in fact the "price control feature in the license."

This conclusion is substantiated by Lenci's further testimony that the competition between open-edge and closed-edge board resulted in a price under the license it would be possible, for the first time, to have effective price control (Ex. 720, R. 6524; Ex. 723, R. 6525). It would scarcely be possible to get stronger or more positive evidence that, contrary to the court's finding 37, the May licenses were signed by each licensee with complete "regard to what other companies did."

In the case of the November licenses the evidence, which will be discussed later, again shows conclusively that the industry acted as a unit and not "independently." Lenci, for example, testified that Ebsary had pretty well made up its mind at the May meeting to sign the November license (R. 2810), and on July 17, 1929 (Ex. 423, R. 6121), Lenci asked counsel to review the draft contract for the July meeting in Chicago, so that if "all of the other Companies agree to it we will be in a position to do the same."

spiral which had reached such a point in 1928, and particularly in 1929, that his company was in a rather serious financial situation. He testified (R. 2971):

> Q. So that it was extremely important to you, from a business standpoint, to get on the one hand a closed-edge board, and on the other hand to make sure that the price conditions were going to be corrected so that you could make a profit?

[28] The court below found that the companies which became licensees did so: (1) "because they desired to settle or avoid litigation," and (2) "to obtain the right to use USG's patents" (Fdgs. 36, 74, R. 4149, 4158). It was further found that USG, in addition to wanting settlement of the litigation, granted the licenses in order to obtain (1) "royalties," (2) "the fixing of a profitable price," and (3) "the various advantages which would normally flow from the general manufacture and sale of the superior product" (Fdg. 74, R. 4158).

It will be noted that the court failed to find that the licensees wanted "the fixing of a profitable price" and the "various advantages" which would result from selling a uniform product. Of course it is scarcely conceivable that only USG could have wanted the advantages to come from "the fixing of a profitable price." In fact, Lenci gave uncontradicted testimony, as noted above, that one of the reasons why Ebsary signed the May license agreements was "to make sure that price conditions were going to be corrected" so that he "could make a profit." The court below said (R. 4114) that Holland also "was interested in promoting better conditions so far as marketability of gypsum board was concerned in order to help his company ts well as the other manufacturers out of their unfortunate financial situation due to the litigation and the price war."

After the parties were all assembled in one room on the first day of the May 1929 meeting and after Avery had made his short talk to them, each non-licensee manufacturer, except Ebsary, then met separately with representatives of USG and proceeded to work out individually the details of their settlement of the USG infringement claims and the claim against Certain-teed.[29] By the afternoon of May 22, 1929, all the non-licensee manufacturers present were able to reach an

The record is also very clear that the licensees wanted to make a uniform product. The point was made on June 4, 1929, by Geo. M. Brown in Ex. 226 (R. 5391), where he speaks of the advantages of "stabilizing the whole industry by making a uniform product and get away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had." Holland testified (R. 897–898) that, "I thought it would be beneficial to the industry to have the people making one kind of board."

It is accordingly submitted that the findings are clearly erroneous in that the court should have found that the licensees, as well as USG, signed the license agreements for the express purpose, inter alia, of (1) "fixing a profitable price" and (2) gaining the "various advantages" to flow from industry-wide manufacture of a uniform product. Indeed, the fact that the Utzman patent had less than three months to run when the licensees were first accepted strongly suggests that the licensees were not really motivated by fear of USG's patent position. When the November licenses were signed, the Utzman patent to make the "superior" closed-edge board had expired and the litigation had all been settled, except in the case of American, and that was settled on November 25, 1929 (R. 4446).

[29] The USG suit against Certain-teed was settled at this time and the million dollar bond posted by George M. Brown was released (Ex. 327, R. 5953).

agreement with USG and the licenses were signed (Exs. 4 and 5; R. 4253, 4267). These license agreements were substantially identical with the Beaver agreement (Ex. 1, R. 4205), except that they contained the following additional provisions: (a) the licensees agreed to sell gypsum board to manufacturers, jobbers, and other wholesale distributors only with the written consent of USG; and (b) the licensees agreed to use only USG's bundling patent in packaging their board for shipment.

On the afternoon of May 22, 1929, all of the licensees, both new and old, were again assembled in one room and at this time USG passed out to each licensee a price bulletin (Ex. 404, R. 6090). Lenci described what took place, as follows (R. 2972–2973):

> Q. And the whole group of licensees were present at that time?
>
> A. I don't remember whether they were all there at that time, but I would say the great majority were there.
>
> Q. You had all signed up your license agreements by that time, and USG then handed out their prices?
>
> A. Yes, after that.
>
> Q. Now, were you surprised when you opened the envelope and saw what the prices were?
>
> A. We were surprised, because we hadn't any idea of what they were going to be.
> Q. Were they higher or lower than the prevailing prices at that time, Mr. Lenci?

A. I am not sure, but it is my recollection that they were about what the USG Company was getting for their board at the time.

Q. And that was higher than you were getting for your board?

A. Yes.

Q. So that were you displeased with the prices that they handed out at that time?

A. I don't think I was, no.

Q. As a matter of fact, wasn't everyone there present rather well pleased with the prices?

A. I couldn't speak for others, I don't know.

Q. Did anybody say that they were too low or too high or anything about it?

A. The only comment I recall was that somebody made the remark that they hoped they would get $30 wallboard, that is the only remark I remember.

Q. Do you know who made that remark?

A. I haven't the ghost of an idea.

Q. And $30 wallboard would have been putting wallboard back to the position where Sheetrock had been for a number of years?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Lenci, the prices of gypsum board couldn't very well go any lower and permit companies to stay in business, could they, at that time?

A. It would have been very difficult.

Q. So that an honest answer would be that your expectation, and that of every other licensee there, was that they were going to be stabilized and raised?

A. We were all human enough to hope that, yes.

Q. And you weren't disappointed?

A. No.[30]

The license bulletins passed out by USG on May 22, 1929, introduced a number of new practices into the industry. The principal innovation was the establishment of a basing point price system (Ex. 404, R. 6090), limited to only seven shipping points.[31] Board prices to dealers were [30] The court below (Fdg. 58, R. 4155) found that: "The licenses were not executed with an intent to fix prices of gypsum board at high levels or any given levels. There was at no time any understanding or agreement or even discussion as to what the prices of gypsum board would be upon the execution of the licenses." It is surely clear from Lenci's testimony, as above quoted, which was uncontradicted and unimpeached, that both old and new licensees understood fully that, when all the licenses were signed, prices would go up. In fact, the court itself, in Finding 60 (R. 4155), found that "any change would, as a matter of economic necessity, be upward." It is perhaps true, as the court found, that there was no understanding as to the precise "high" or "given" levels at which prices would be fixed, but such a finding does not negative the fact that it was understood that they would be raised to some level. And the circumstance that all parties were content to delegate to USG the ultimate task of dictating the price does not alter the fact that they understood and intended that prices would be raised. Finding 58 is, therefore, manifestly erroneous.

[31] Exhibit 404, as it appears in the record, lists Acme, Texas, as an eighth basing point, but this is a printer's error.

to be calculated on the basis of a fixed mill base price plus freight from the nearest of these seven points to the point of destination. Since board made by different manufacturers varied in weight it was necessary also to prescribe a uniform billing weight of 1,850 pounds per thousand upon which to calculate the freight charge (R. 6093). Only by so doing, could the price to dealers be kept uniform. In addition special provisions were made for truck deliveries. All wallboard seconds were to "be plainly marked with visible red stamp" as seconds. Such elaborate regulations, when considered in the face of the fact that the Utzman patent was to expire in eleven weeks, suggests strongly that there was a general understanding that price control was to continue under some other patent.

On May 23, 1929, the same manufacturers were again assembled in the Palmer House for their third joint meeting. It was at this meeting that Avery made good on his previous assurance to Holland, "that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available" (Ex. 206, R. 5371). According to Lenci, Avery told those assembled that USG had secured the American rights for the Bayer application for a patent on a process to make a so-called "bubble board." Roos, of USG, also had an application pending for a patent for a similar process. Avery explained that the inventions related to a lightweight board made by the introduction of soap foam in the gypsum slurry (R. 2531–2532), and proposed that the industry take out licenses under the Roos and Bayer applications (R. 2982).

Following the last day of the May 1929 meeting, Avery promptly sent out to all licensees a proposed license agreement under the Roos and Bayer applications (R. 2531–2532; Ex. 224, 225, R. 5389, 5390). Thus on May 29, 1929, Avery wrote to George M. Brown (Ex. 224, R. 2389) that they had "drawn up a tentative and suggested outline of license for the bubble system which we discussed when you were here." On June 4, 1929 (Ex. 225, R. 5390) Brown acknowledged the receipt of the copy of the license agreement and stated that, "We are most anxious to promote harmony and friendship in the Gypsum Industry, especially with your own Company * * *." On the same date, Brown also wrote a candid memorandum about this proposal, the material portions of which are as follows (Ex. 226, R. 5390):

> A claim was made by Mr. Avery in his conversation that 50¢ and, perhaps, $1.00 of cost would be saved on each thousand square feet. Of this, 25¢ would go to pay royalty. Another unknown part would go to pay for equipment of a lot of machinery and it would take a good while to get even. They would have a price control of our business, which might be to our advantage and might be to be our disadvantage in future. They should be just as anxious to have us use this as we should be to get it if there are to be the benefits that they anticipate in stabilizing the whole industry by making a uniform product and get away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had. The saving is too slight to cause us very great worry even if never permitted to use it and the door will certainly be open later for its use if it has the merit that they believe it has. Under a contract sufficiently liberal, we should proceed at once.

A meeting of all licensees was held in Chicago on June 6, 1929, attended by all of the licensees with the possible exception of Texas (R. 2529). According to Lenci, who represented Ebsary, Henning of USG presided, and, among the matters discussed was the proposed new price-fixing patent license agreement recently submitted to the licensees by USG (R. 2531). The licensees were advised by Henning that American expected to become a licensee (R. 2533). At this time Henning asked those in attendance to "get after" their lawyers to look over the proposed license contracts and send to USG their comments concerning the contracts (R. 2531). C. O. Brown, assistant to the president of Certain-teed, attended the June 6 meeting and shortly after wrote a memorandum of what occurred, which leaves no doubt that the licensees were greatly interested in promoting price control by means of price-fixing patent license agreements in order to maintain stabilized market conditions in the industry. The material portions of the memorandum are as follows (Ex. 227, R. 5392–5394):

> Price control on plaster board expires in August of this year with the expiration of the Basic Patent. Price control on plaster board can be extended for another 17 years if a satisfactory working arrangement can be made with the Bubble Patent. For legal reasons, however, the bubble patent should not be considered from the standpoint of price control but should be gone into by each manufacturer from the standpoint of economy and benefit. Price control would naturally follow such a move.
> Mr. Knode, Vice-President in charge of Manufacturing, of U. S. G. Company estimates a saving in manufacturing cost under the Bubble Patent to be 50¢ to $2.00 per thousand, depending on the type of board made. Mr. Knode of the U. S. G. Company will be glad to have any of our manufacturing men call on him and go into the proposition in detail and assure themselves of the saving in cost and its advantages, prior to signing license. I would suggest that Mr. Van Hagan arrange to see Mr. Knode sometime in the next two weeks, the reason for this being that the lawyers feel that speed is advisable in lining up various manufacturers under this Patent and upon the expiration of the Basic Patent on plaster board, even though the patent will not be issued by that time, and it will be necessary to pay a royalty of 25¢ per square, prior to actual issuance of the patent on any board manufactured. This will not be a hardship, however, if the saving is as outlined and they assure us that they can prove that their figures are conservative.

* * * * *

The lawyers are very emphatic that there is a much less chance of being accused of using the patent as a subterfuge to control price—first being, it is gone into before the expiration of the Basic patent on plaster board and second, it is gone into from the standpoint of economy in cost.

The lawyers that have gone over the patent and made a careful study of the situation pronounce the patent a very strong one if and when issued.

Sometime prior to July 3, 1929, a conference was held between George M. Brown, A. Whittemore, and C. O. Brown, all connected with Certain-teed, at which conference it was decided that Certain-teed would become a licensee of USG under the Roos and Bayer Application (Ex. 228, R. 5394). C. O. Brown wrote a memorandum of this conference "To be attached to bubble contract and bundling contract between United States Gypsum Company and Certain-teed Products Corporation." In this memo, C. O. Brown wrote as follows:

> Taking these things into consideration, plus other advantages in working under the patent, we feel justified in taking a license and paying the royalty set out by the licensor.

When questioned what was meant by the phrase "other advantages," Brown testified as follows (R. 1069):

> Q. I want to take you to the second page, the first line. There you say, "Taking these things into consideration, plus the other advantages," and so forth, and I would like to ask you what the "other advantages" are that you had in mind there?
>
> A. There would be a stabilized market on gypsum lath.
>
> Q. And by "stabilized," you mean what?
> A. Price control.

Both George M. Brown and A. Whittemore approved the reasoning of C. O. Brown for on the face of the memo itself George M. Brown wrote, "O..K. to sign up GMB," and Whittemore wrote, "7/3/29, O. K. AW" (Ex. 228, R. 5394).

On July 23, 1929, the board of directors of National met and discussed the proposed license under the Roos application. The minutes of this meeting indicate that the industry was not so much concerned with the Roos application as an advancement in the art of making gypsum board, but instead, was interested in it as a means of stabilizing prices. The material portions of the minutes are as follows (Ex. 200, R. 5362):

* * * * *

The President stated that the United States Gypsum Company has been working on a plan to stabilize the Gypsum Industry and has offered to license the entire Industry under the new method of manufacturing gypsum wall board known as the "Bubble System." The license agreements submitted to each of the wallboard manufacturers contain price fixing clauses and under the agreements submitted the prices of wall board would be fixed for the whole industry for the term of approximately seventeen years.

The President further stated that if cooperation in the Industry could be accomplished by such means, he believed that it would be worth while for this Corporation to enter into such an agreement, if the "Bubble System" could be obtained for a reasonable consideration.

* * * * *

Upon motion duly made, seconded, put to vote and unanimously carried,

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee of the Corporation be and they hereby are authorized and empowered to negotiate and enter into an agreement or agreements with the United States Gypsum Company, controlling the manufacture of gypsum wall board, upon such terms and conditions as a majority of the said Committee shall deem most advisable, provided that the United States Gypsum Company, by virtue of the agreement with this Corporation and with other manufacturers of gypsum wall board, shall control the price of wall board sold in the United States and its possessions."

Two days after Baker advised his board of directors about the plan of USG to stabilize the gypsum industry, a conference was held in Chicago which was attended by substantially all the licensees of USG. This conference was held on or about July 25, 1929 (Ex. 612, R. 6366, Answer of USG to interrogatory No. 34). C. O. Brown wrote a memo of this conference in which he stated, "considerable progress was made between the attorneys on an agreement for contract covering Bubble license" (Ex. 231, R. 5402). However, events did not move too smoothly at this conference, for Brown writes that "There are difficulties outside the contracts, however, which prevent two Companies, Universal and National Gypsum Company, from signing." Brown sets forth these difficulties as follows:

> The Universal Gypsum Company is suing the National Gypsum Company for infringement of the Starch Patent sold by Mr. Haggerty, formerly connected with National, to the Universal Gypsum Company. In selling this patent, Mr. Haggerty recognized its validity and the contract is binding on the National Gypsum Company, making it almost impossible for them to contest the Patent.[22] It is my understanding that Universal are asking National to pay damages in the amount of $250,000. National, of course, does not want to contract a double obligation until this is settled.

The Universal Gypsum Company are placing the blame for not signing on the fact that they have not assured themselves that the Bubble process is more economical than the Starch process and the fact that they are in the hands of the receivers would make it impossible for them to bind themselves for a longer period than the receivership. Other attorneys, however, feel this is largely a smoke screen for not signing and it is my opinion that they feel by holding out they can make the Starch patent of value by forcing it on the industry by sale or on a royalty basis whereas if they and National sign the Bubble Patent, which National would not do before first getting a release from Universal on their

> The United States Gypsum Company advise that they have nothing to fear from the Starch Patent under their present Bubble process. There is some doubt as to the strength of this Starch Patent and, of course, all of the Companies, if they did use it, would be free to contest its validity in case of litigation, with the exception of the National Gypsum Company.

According to Brown, although the United States Gypsum Company felt that it had nothing to fear from the Starch patent, nevertheless, "in the interest of harmony, however, the USG Company has been making some tests to see if there was any value in combining the two processes, the Starch and the Bubble" [22] (Ex. 231, R. 5403). Brown then suggests that the real purpose of USG in combining the processes was not so much to advance the art in the industry by the use of the starch patents, but instead, the two were to be combined to provide a means for immediate price control. He wrote (R. 5403):

> * * * They [USG] advised that, based on their experiments to date, they feel there would be some benefit to using Starch in a limited degree with their Bubble process, such a combination resulting in better working of the Stucco, fewer Seconds, etc.

[22] The starch patents referred to are the Hite and Haggerty patents (R. 60, 64).

> Further benefit could be derived by combining the two patents due to the fact that the Starch Patent has been issued, whereas only applications have been filed under the Bubble Patent, so a combination of the two systems would give a patent to work under in the manufacture and sale of Gypsum Wallboard immediately, whereas under only the Bubble process there would be an interim between August 6th and the date of issuance of the Bubble Patent where there would be no Patent control. There is, of course, considerable benefit to having Patent control continue without a break.

Brown further stated in his memorandum that, "Mr. Avery spent considerable time in the last two days with Mr. Holland * * * trying to work out some mutually satisfactory proposition for buying the Starch Patent, or licensing the industry under both the Starch and Bubble process," and also that, "There will be further conferences between Universal and U. S. G. within the next ten days and another meeting is to be held in Chicago on either August 5th or 6th when the situation will be discussed further." (Memo attached to Ex. 231, R. 5405.)

A meeting of licensees was held in Chicago on August 6, 1929, the day the Utzman patent expired, which was attended by substantially all the persons who had attended the meeting on July 25, 1929 (Ex. 612, R. 6366, Answer of USG to Interrogatory 34). C. O. Brown wrote a memo of what transpired and from this memo it is apparent that some time prior to August 6, 1929, USG and Universal had reached an understanding on the starch patent. Brown stated (Ex. 231, R. 5400) that a "proposition has been submitted as follows":

> USG to take over Starch Patent of Universal, no cash is to be involved in the transaction but Universal to get a free license under USG's Bubble Patent * * *.
>
> Before the Starch patent of Universal was injected into the picture, it was planned to continue the license and price control on Board through USG's Bubble Patents when issued * * *.
>
> It would be the plan to write one contract covering all Patents involved, Machinery Patent on closed-edge board, Bubble Patent, Starch Patent, and Bundling Patent. The Attorneys feel that such a contract would be exceptionally strong and price control could be maintained for the life of the Contract without difficulty.
>
>
> The National and Universal have settled their litigation on basis of cash settlement by National to Universal. With this settlement everything seems to be in shape to go ahead under Patent control continuing without a break, if we are willing to pay 3½% royalty.
>
> All of the Independent Gypsum Companies are willing to sign on this basis * * *. Another meeting will be held during the week of August 20th at which time it is hoped that a contract can be agreed to and signed * * *.

On August 27, 1929, the board of directors of National held a meeting, the minutes of which state (Ex. 201, R. 5364):

> Resolved, That the President of the Corporation be and he hereby is authorized and empowered to sign a license agreement with the United States Gypsum Company covering the use of the Bubble and the Haggerty Patents, * * * provided that all the present licensees of the United States Gypsum Company enter into a similar license and provided further that in the judgment of the President such action will result in legal stabilization of the markets.

On October 3, 1929, C. O. Brown pointed out that USG would not "turn over all information on this [the bubble process] prior to the License being signed," but this delay would not interfere with immediate price control. He wrote (Ex. 234, R. 5408):

> This delay will not interfere with the operation of patent and price control, as the Universal Starch patent will control that feature and royalty will start as soon as the license is signed. We are all using enough Starch to say we are making Board under the Universal Patent.

New price-fixing patent license agreements based on the Roos "foam" application, and the Hite and Haggerty "starch" patents which Universal sold to USG for that purpose, were thereafter executed. These licenses became effective with respect to price control on November 5, 1929 (Ex. 235, R. 5409). See Exs. 6, 7 to 13 inclusive, and 15; R. 4280, 4315, 4337 to 4448, and 4474.

The agreements entered into by each licensee with USG under the so-called "starch" and "foam" patents were substantially identical and, among other things, provided in substance as follows:

> (a) USG agreed to disclose the "foam" process to its licensees.
> (b) In addition to the Hite and Haggerty patents, and the applications relating to the Roos or Bayer process, the licenses included all the patents and applications which were licensed under the previous agreements.
> (c) USG reserved the right to determine and fix the prices at which the licensees sold board (1) "manufactured by licensee by use of any of the machines or appliances covered by any letters patent * * *"; "or" (2) "manufactured by second parties and which shall embody the inventions * * * claimed in either patent number 1,500,452 or * * * 1,230,297"; "or (3) "commencing with the date when a patent shall have been granted upon the Roos or Bayer applications any of said board manufactured by licensee, the body or core of which is made according to the process * * * of said Roos or Bayer inventions * * *."

(d) The licensees agreed to pay stipulated royalties on all board whether patented or unpatented.

(e) USG licensed the licensees to use the methods covered by certain of its patents in packaging gypsum board, and the licensees agreed to pay royalties on packages of all kinds whether patented or unpatented.

(f) The licensees agreed to sell gypsum board to manufacturers and other wholesale distributors only with the written consent of USG.

(g) Jobbers were defined as "those who do not manufacture but buy and sell * * * board in straight or mixed cars * * * and who do not sell at retail," and no consent was required to sell to them.

(h) The licensees acknowledged, and agreed not to contest, the validity of all patents then issued and of all patents subsequently to be issued on applications described in the agreements.

It should be noted that while the foregoing agreement covered 50 patents and seven applications for patents, the only new patents and applications for patents that were not already covered by the so-called May 1929 agreements were the Hite and Haggerty "starch" patents, three applications by Roos on the "foam" process, and the Bayer application.

E. Concerning Texas, Newark, and Celotex

Texas was the only licensee under the Utzman patent that did not sign the license agreement under the Roos application and the Hite and Haggerty patents at approximately the same time the other licensees signed. On February 10, 1937, after the license it acquired in 1927 had expired, Texas finally signed up (Ex. 8, R. 4337). At that time it was, of course, a matter of common knowledge in the industry that prices on board had been fixed for a number of years and Texas had long been familiar with the general licensing arrangements and sold its board at "prevailing prices" (R. 3435). Texas admits that since February 10, 1937, it has complied with the USG price bulletins (R. 183–184).

Kelley Plasterboard, the predecessor of the appellee, Newark Plaster Company, was not a licensee under the Utzman patent. Kelley, however, did sign the November agreements on the "starch" and "foam" patents on April 23, 1930 (Ex. 15, R. 4474). Thereafter Kelley attended a number of licensee meetings, particularly the licensee meetings of October 17, 1932 (R. 2602), of November 15, 1932 (R. 2640), of December 13, 1932 (R. 2672), and on April 27, 1933 (R. 2709).

Newark Plaster Company acquired Kelley in 1937, and, Tomkins of Newark testified that when his company acquired Kelley he had talked with officers of USG and was conversant with the general licensing arrangements that existed in the industry (R. 1861). Newark assumed the license to Kelley (Ex. 16, R. 4495).

Celotex did not become a licensee until 1939. American, the predecessor of Celotex, had long been an active member when Celotex took over its business. American's license with USG, dated November 25, 1929 (Ex. 13, R. 4446), was assigned by American to Celotex on April 12, 1939 (Ex. 14, R. 4469).

In the nature of the case, Celotex had no part in the early negotiations. However, it does appear that C. F. Miller, Manager of American, who continued as Manager of American Gypsum Division of Celotex (R. 1374), after April 12, 1939, had met with Avery in the early license negotiations between American and USG, and was fully conversant with the purpose, scope, and effect of the licensing arrangement (Ex. 310, R. 5859).

Moreover, Celotex admits "that USG entered into similar agreements with National, Universal, Atlantic, Ebsary and Certain-teed * * *" (R. 204). Celotex also admits that "from the year 1939 to the date of filing of said complaint, USG has determined and fixed minimum selling prices and terms and conditions of sale of this defendant as its licensee * * *" (R. 206).

F. The Metallized Board Licenses

"Metallized board," which USG claims to be covered by another Roos patent, is nothing more than ordinary gypsum board or gypsum lath except that one surface of the "board" has affixed thereto a paper-thin sheet of metallic foil. Generally speaking, it may be manufactured by the same process that is usually employed in the manufacture of board or lath (R. 3439). However, since the commonest purpose of using this type of "board" is to reflect both heat and cold, and since its most common use in the building field is to provide insulation, it is usually used as lath. The metallic foil side is placed next to the studding and the plaster coat is applied to the room side of the "board." Usually, it is made in the same dimensions as common gypsum lath (R. 2788).

By 1934 the industry had been operating under price-fixing patent license agreements for a period of approximately five years. By this time, as will be later pointed out (infra, pp. 102–160), the industry had been thoroughly organized at all levels and its prices had been stabilized. At a meeting of board licensees held on May 23, 1934, USG presented to those present a price-fixing license agreement relating to metallized board. It was the intention at this time to bring all existing licensees under this new patent license agreement.

As Henning of USG wrote Lenci of Ebsary on August 20, 1934 (Ex. 547, R. 6238):

> At the board license meeting May 23d, 1934, we presented you with a contract for the reflective backing of plasterboard and wallboard.
>
> It was the intention to license all of our board licensees, and to date we have received nothing from you in regard to your position on this matter.
> Please give me your comments or criticism.

Under date of August 20, 1934, USG sent similar letters to Atlantic, Universal, and American (Exs. 287, 208, 308; R. 5841, 5373, 5858). By September 6, 1934, National, Certain-teed, and Universal had expressed their willingness to enter into such a license, and the attitude that these companies took concerning this license was communicated to Atlantic (Ex. 288, R. 5842). By September 24, 1934, American also had agreed to become a licensee under this agreement, and the fact that Universal, National, and American had "agreed to sign the license" was also communicated to Certain-teed (Ex. 244, R. 5420).

During these negotiations the prospective licensees also were in communication with one another on the subject. For instance, under date of June 23, 1934, National sent a letter to American enclosing a copy of an opinion concerning this proposed license submitted to them by their attorney (Ex. 300, 300A, R. 5851, 5852). The attorney's opinion concluded with this language (R. 5854):

> * * * I assume from our conversation that in the interest of harmony in the Industry, that you did not desire to have me make any objections to any matters contained in the proposed agreement, which are not, in my opinion, of major importance.

Under date of September 18, 1934, American wrote National that it was ready to sign the license agreement (Ex. 302, R. 5855).

In the fall of 1934 Certain-teed contemplated selling metallized board to their trade. They at first decided not to manufacture it but to purchase their requirements from USG at the usual manufacturers' discount. However, when they approached USG to buy, USG refused to sell until they became a licensee under the metallized board patent. C. O. Brown wrote his district managers about Certain-teed's experience with USG (Ex. 247, R. 5423):

> Attached is price information sent out by Licensor on metallized board.
> We have signed a license on this product but do not contemplate manufacturing it at the present time.
> U. S. Gypsum Company will sell us this board, unbranded, at published prices less 12% on lath and 15% on board. They were not willing to do this until we signed a license. * * *

Brown's statements are supported by Henning's [USG] letter to Certain-teed in which he said in part (Ex. 245, R. 5421):

> I do not think at this time that we are contemplating selling this commodity to you, and believe that it would be wise for you to figure on manufacturing it.
> In order to have a price control on this commodity it will be necessary for you to take out a license to manufacture it.

Ebsary also had the same economic pressure put upon it to sign the agreement. They were not permitted to purchase metallized board at a discount until they signed the license agreement with USG (R. 2769; Exs. 548, 694; R. 6239, 6493). After the agreement was signed Ebsary could and did buy board at a discount (R. 2769).

Eventually all of the manufacturers who were licensees under the so-called November 1929 license agreements, except Texas and Niagara, became licensees of USG under substantially identical licenses relating to metallized board. These licenses were entered into late in 1934 or early in 1935 and are in force at the present time (Exs. 17 to 25, inclusive; R. 4499 to 4587). From the time they were entered into, USG has fixed and determined the price at which the licensees sold metallized board (Exs. 249 to 253, inclusive, R. 5427 to 5782).

USG's price fixing was based upon a provision in the license which reserved to them, "the right to determine * * * during the existence of said patents and so long as said rights, licenses and privileges hereunder granted shall continue, the minimum price * * * at which Licensee shall * * * sell plaster board having a metallized surface which is covered by said Roos Patent [Patent No. 1,914,345, relating to metallized board] or any of the patents set forth in Schedule A * * *." (Exhibit 11 attached to complaint, paragraph IV, R. 116.)

Under date of April 12, 1939 (Ex. 23, R. 4571), an agreement was entered into between American and Celotex whereby Celotex assumed American's metallized board license (Ex. 22, R. 4559). On January 3, 1939, an agreement was entered into between USG and Newark whereby USG consented to the assignment of the Kelley metallized license to Newark (Ex. 25, R. 4585). Texas was not a licensee under the metallized board agreement.

G. The Perforated Lath Licenses

Perforated lath is ordinary gypsum lath with holes bored or stamped through it. The claimed purpose of placing holes in the lath is to allow the plaster to penetrate through the holes and form a mechanical key on the reverse side to hold the plaster to the lath better. Since perforated lath is a substitute for ordinary lath it is made in the same dimensions as ordinary lath.

Perforated lath is old in the art. As early as September 7, 1917, Makowski applied for a patent on a board of this type of lath and in the application stated (Ex. 605, R. 6321):

> The invention relates to a new and useful art particularly to means for perforating stable or dry wall board; and to the process of forming holes or recesses therein adapted to act as key holds for bonding finishing plaster coats applied to the wall board, and to a new article of manufacture.

United States patent No. 1,349,778 was issued to Makowski on this application on August 17, 1920 (Ex. 605, R. 6321). Even prior to that date, six United States patents had been issued on that type of lath (Ex. 602, R. 6307). As a matter of fact, the Schumaker Wall Board Corporation, as early as 1926, had manufactured perforated lath on the Pacific coast that had holes through the lath 3/8 of an inch in diameter and the holes were spaced about 3½ inches apart horizontally and 2½ inches vertically (R. 3545; Ex. 313, R. 5862).

In the USG Patent, No. 1,938,354, Roos claimed to have invented a new perforated lath, the distinctive feature of which was that it had ¾ inch holes punched through it arranged in horizontal and vertical rows 4 inches apart (R. 3620–3621). The Roos board passed the Bureau of Standards' one-hour first test. Late in 1936 National made a perforated lath with holes 7/8 of an inch in diameter arranged in a staggered manner (R. 3470–3471, 3615), and in 1938 Schumaker made a board with holes 13/16 of an inch in diameter (R. 3524). Both the National and the Schumaker board passed the one-hour fire test (Ex. 610, R. 6328; Ex. 611, 6345).

USG first offered its licensees a price-fixing license to manufacture and sell perforated gypsum lath under the Roos patent early in 1936. (See answers of defendants to paragraph 115 (R. 30) of the complaint.) In order to get an expression from the industry on this proposal, Henning of USG called a conference of licensees to meet on March 11, 1936 (Ex. 313, R. 5862). The conference was held on that date and representatives of USG, Atlantic, American, National, and Certain-teed attended (Ex. 313, R. 5862). At this conference Henning presented the case for USG and told those present: (a) that USG proposed to place this type of board on the market about April 1, 1936; (b) that USG would be willing to license all licensees to manufacture and sell this type of board on a 10¢ royalty basis; (c) that USG proposed to set a minimum price of $15.25 per thousand square feet; and (d) that USG would furnish those who accepted the new license with their requirements of perforated lath at the usual manufacturers' discount, pending installation by the licensee of equipment for manufacturing this type of board (Ex. 313, R. 5862).

The proposed plan did not meet with unanimous approval; it was pointed out to Henning (a) that the plan to offer this type of board to the trade on April 1, 1936, did not afford to the industry sufficient time for any proper consideration of all factors involved; (b) that the royalty proposed was too high; (c) that the proposed minimum price was too low and should be at least $16.00 per thousand square feet; and (d) that the proposed patent under which the licensees were to be licensed was of doubtful validity since perforated lath had been marketed on the Pacific coast for the past twenty years under such trade names as "Key Hold," "Button Lath," and "Lock Lath" (Ex. 313, R. 5866). The price at this time fixed by USG for ordinary gypsum lath was $15.00 per thousand. This meeting was adjourned without the licensees coming to any definite decision.

Two days after this meeting, Henley of Certain-teed prepared a memorandum of what transpired at the conference and sent it to Whittemore, vice president of Certain-teed (Ex. 313, R. 5866–5867). In this memorandum Henley pointed out the advantages to Certain-teed that the proposal afforded: (a) if they became licensees they would be able to use the fire test data at hand and would not be put to any additional expense in having any type of lath they might develop fire tested; (b) that by accepting a license, Certain-teed would save the expense of any patent investigation; (c) that by accepting a license, Certain-teed could get into production at an early date; and (d) that acceptance by Certain-teed would bring about a "strengthening of license arrangement" (Ex. 313, R. 5862). The last reason, of course, indicates that Certain-teed recognized the new license as further support for the general "license arrangement" existing in the industry.

In the same memorandum, Henley also pointed out the disadvantages of becoming a licensee: (a) that if they became licensees, "we recognize a very flimsy (in our opinion) patent"; and (b) that the royalty seemed excessive in view of the questionable value of the patent relating to perforated lath (Ex. 313, R. 5866). Henley concludes with the recommendation, "that any conference we might have with Mr. Henning (at this time) would be unwise and would tend to weaken the position taken generally by the licensees at the conference" (Ex. 313, R. 5867). This recommendation is further evidence that the proposed license agreement was not just a matter of individual concern, but rather was one of importance to the whole industry.

About three years prior to the March 11, 1936, meeting, patent counsel for Certain-teed had advised it that the USG patent was invalid (Ex. 602, R. 6307). Again, exactly one week prior to the conference of March 11, 1936, patent counsel for Certain-teed had an occasion to re-examine Roos Patent No. 1,938,354, on which the proposed price-fixing license was to be based, and advised Certain-teed as follows (Ex. 601, R. 6303):

> I am still of the opinion that the Roos patent is completely invalid. It is a patent for empirical formulae and empirical formulae are ordinarily not patentable since they are within the ordinary skill of any competent research man in the particular art in which the work is done. As I said in my opinion of December 27, 1933, given the Rader patent cited in the file history of the Roos patent and the problem of making a practical commercial perforated plasterboard for the purpose of keying the plaster to the board, with the fire-resistance problem also put up to the plasterboard and plaster man, any one of them would reach practically the same result as Roos reached.
> I think the entire patent could be completely ignored with perfect confidence in the outcome of any litigation involving it. It might be expensive to do so, because patent litigation is necessarily expensive, and it might be unwise to do so from the standpoint of commercial policy, since the patent might be useful, if acquiesced in, for stabilizing the manufacture and sale of plasterboard lath coming within its terms.

Within a few days after this conference of March 11, 1936, Henley of Certain-teed conferred with Burley of National concerning perforated lath. Of this conference, Henley wrote to Certain-teed, in part, as follows (Ex. 314, R. 5868):

> In further reference my memo March 23, above subject: Have just discussed subject matter with Mr. Burley of National Gypsum Company and outline below their definite feeling in the matter:
>
> 1. Are of the opinion that patent is very weak.
>
> 2. To use Burley's expression, they feel USG have a lot of "crust" in asking a 10¢ per M royalty.
>
> 3. National's Patent Attorney has advised them to go ahead and manufacture a Perforated Lath with, however, a different size hole and, perhaps, staggered as to location.
>
> 5. Burley is definitely of the opinion that USG will not take an alleged infringement (involving Perforated Lath) into court, inasmuch as it would involve probably all of their patents and there might arise some serious question as to the validity of USG's patent position and the question would arise as to whether or not same were used as a "vehicle" for price-control purposes.

Notwithstanding the advice of its patent counsel, Certain-teed accepted a license under the perforated lath patent (Ex. 26, R. 4587). In spite of his doubts of the v[illegible]ity of the Roos patent Whittemore favored taking a license for business reasons (R. 1416). It is a fair inference from this action that Certain-teed was interested in obtaining the advantages of price control. The same is true of USG, for Knode of that company advised Henley of Certain-teed that USG was "not particularly interested in the income received from royalties" (Ex. 335, R. 6002). Ebsary, American, and Kelley also became licensees (Exs. 28, 30, 31; R. 4595, 4604, 4610).

USG first fixed a price of $15.25 per thousand at which it and its licensees would sell perforated lath (Ex. 313, R. 5862). This represented an advance of 25¢ per thousand over ordinary lath (Ex. 313, R. 5862). USG maintained this 25¢ differential on perforated lath until 1938, when the price for perforated lath was made the same as that of ordinary lath (Ex. 39, R. 5247). At this time USG, recognizing that it could not bring the whole industry under this license, offered to give all of its licensees a royalty-free license under the perforated lath patent (Exs. 27, 29, 32; R. 4593, 4602, 4616). Since acceptance of the license involved recognition of the validity of the USG perforated lath patent, National and Texas refused to become licensees either under the royalty-free agreement or, for that matter, under the original agreement. Celotex did not assume the American license;

Newark became a licensee under the royalty-free license (Ex. 32, R. 4616).

Since 1936 when USG placed its perforated lath on the market, National and Texas have sold the perforated lath marketed by them at the same prices at which USG and its licensees have sold their lath (R. 1594, 3471). No action has ever been brought by USG for the infringement of its perforated lath patent (Answers of defendants to paragraph 120 (R. 31, 296) of complaint). It is a fair inference from this that USG had strong doubts as to the validity of its perforated lath patent and has been reluctant to disturb the peace and harmony established by prior agreements.

OPERATION AND EFFECT OF THE CONSPIRACY

The signing of the license agreements under the Utzman patent in May 1929 by Certain-teed and the other companies who were then making an open-edge board, was a turning point in the gypsum industry. Simultaneously with the execution of these agreements USG issued the first of a long series of so-called price bulletins (occupying 992 pages of the present record) (R. 4619–5256, 5427–5782), each containing progressively more elaborate and detailed provisions, until virtually every phase of the manufacture and sale of gypsum board was controlled and to a lesser degree the sale of related products. These regulations, cooperatively enforced and uniformly adhered to, have produced a completely regimented and noncompetitive industry.

A. Raising and stabilizing prices

The first price bulletin (Ex. 404, R. 6090) that of May 23, 1929, as above mentioned, set a mill base price of $20 per M square feet on 3/8" wallboard at Oakfield, N. Y., and at each of the six other listed basing points. In addition, at New Brighton, N. Y., the minimum f. o. b. price was put at $22.60 per M; at Charleston, Mass., $23.65; and at Buffalo, N. Y., Loveland, Colo. (mixed car shipments), and Philadelphia, Pa., $22.73, $30, and $22.60, respectively. The price for 3/8" plasterboard, including lath, was put at $13.50 per M sq. ft. at the seven basing points.

These prices represented a very substantial increase over the prices prevailing in 1927, 1928, and the first quarter of 1929. USG had, for many years prior to 1927, maintained a mill price of $30 per M square feet on its 3/8" wallboard, known as Sheetrock. During 1927, however, Henning, Vice President in charge of sales for USG, reported that it was necessary "to announce a reduction of $5.00 per thousand on Sheetrock to meet price concessions and lower prices offered by our competitors" (Ex. 619, R. 6403). Moreover, "It was also necessary to introduce and offer a subgrade board—Crown Wallboard—at a mill price of $20.00 per thousand, or ten dollars less than our regular Sheetrock price" (Ex. 619, R. 6403).

Henning's report for 1928 (Ex. 620, R. 6411) shows that USG's prices had to be still further reduced:

> Due to Certain-teed's activities, who are now offering wallboard for $12.00 in all areas except the central area where they are on a $15.00 price, Crown has gravitated to $14.00 and $16.00 which was necessary to hold establishment and get tonnage. With the wide spread between $14.00 on Crown and $25.00 on Sheetrock, making a $11.00 differential, it has been necessary during July to drop the price of Sheetrock in order to hold Sheetrock in the markets. In these areas we are now quoting Crown at $14.00 against Certain-teed's $12.00 board and holding Sheetrock at $18.00 and the same applies proportionately where other prices on Certain-teed prevail. We look for further declines both in Sheetrock and Crown prices with increased tonnage and establishment.

For the first quarter of 1929, Henning, Vice President in charge of sales for USG, reported (Ex. 621, R. 6416) plasterboard selling at $12.00, with a statement that "We are meeting this competition with unbranded plasterboard * * *." Moreover, "due to the rapidly declining prices on Crown," it has been necessary "to adjust Sheet-rock to lower levels in most markets."[34] It is evident, therefore, that when in May 1929 USG fixed the mill price for wallboard at $20.00 per thousand and for plasterboard at $13.50 per thousand (Ex. 404, R. 6090) this represented a very substantial increase in prices in most markets.[35]

[34] In Fdg. 24 (R. 4146) the court below found that "when the closed-edge board of the Utzman patent came into the market the open-edge board was largely displaced under the demand of the trade for the better product."

The evidence in the record, without exception, is all to the contrary. Henning's reports for the years 1926–1929 (Exs. 616–621, R. 6380–6418), made it abundantly clear that throughout all this period open-edge board was sold at a lower price to the trade in active competition with closed-edge board. Griswold's testimony is to the same effect (R. 572–573) and the answers of USG and Certain-teed to paragraphs 68, 69, 71 through 73 of the complaint (R. 243, 281–283) admit that open-edge sold in competition with closed-edge board during this period. In fact, the lower court's own finding (Fdg. 90, R. 4161) states that Texas, Certain-teed and Ebsary were making open-edge board during this period, the Court erroneously omitting reference to Niagara and American which also made open-edge board prior to signing their licenses. See supra, p. 65. The court's finding is, therefore, manifestly erroneous.

It was only after the industry was finally brought together under the 1929 license agreements that open-edge board disappeared from the market. As far as the "demand of the trade" was concerned, after the agreements were entered into, it was simply a case of the trade accepting closed-edge board or nothing; the trade had no choice at all. For the reasons for the elimination of open-edge board, see pp. 108–113, infra.

[35] The court below found that USG "established patented board prices at the levels at which USG had been selling board just prior to the execution" of the May 1929 licenses (Fdg. 88, R. 4161). It is apparent that the court's finding is true only as respects certain markets.

B. Eliminating No. 2 Board

But the increase in price for Sheetrock did not mark the full advance, for Sheetrock, even at $18.00 per thousand, was being driven off the market. In the first quarter of 1929 more than half of USG's sales of wallboard consisted of Crown or No. 2 board (Ex. 621, R. 6416) which even in 1928 was being priced as low as $14.00 per thousand to sell in competition with the $12.00 open-edge board being sold by Certain-teed (Ex. 620, R. 6411). When the May 1929 bulletin was issued (Ex. 404, R. 6090), the price of No. 2 board was advanced to $17.50. Two weeks later, on June 7, 1929 (Ex. 410, R. 6099), this price was raised to $18.75, and on June 26, 1929 (Ex. 413, R. 6104), to $20.00 per thousand. In other words in a space of 5 weeks the price of No. 2 board was raised from a low of $14 to $20 and made the same as for No. 1 board.

On July 9, 1929 (Ex. 414, R. 6106) the price of 3/8" wallboard was further raised to $22.50 per thousand. No price was given in this nor has any been given in any subsequent bulletin for No. 2 board, which meant, according to the uncontradicted testimony of Lenci (R. 2518–2519), that No. 2 board was to be sold at the same price as No. 1 board or not sold at all. Obviously no one would pay $22.50 for No. 2 board when No. 1 could be had for the same price.[36] Accordingly in the space of roughly 7 weeks a dealer who could have bought USG Crown board at $14 per thousand now had to pay $22.50 per thousand for Sheetrock, more than a 50% increase, or do without.

C. Eliminating seconds

Substantially the same course was taken in the elimination of seconds, except that it took [36] The court below found that "there is no evidence concerning the elimination of No. 2 board" (Fdg. 91, R. 4162) and "there was no agreement or understanding that * * * No. 2 board would not be manufactured" (Fdg. 67, R. 4157). Contrary to the court's findings, there is strong evidence that appellees intended to eliminate No. 2 board as a first step in stabilizing prices. Griswold testified that when everyone took a license "naturally that would have a tendency to eliminate these other boards from the market because they were only put out to compete with and raise a disturbance, as a rule" (R. 574). Henning confirms that Crown board was put out purely as a temporary competitive measure (Ex. 619, R. 6403). Holland testified that "I thought it would be beneficial to the industry to have people making one kind of board" (R. 898). Geo. M. Brown in Ex. 226 (R. 5390) speaks of the importance of "making a uniform product" and getting "away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had." And, finally, Avery in his report to the stockholders for 1929, stresses the advantages to follow from "a full and uniform use of the patented methods" (Ex. 332, R. 5987).

It is submitted that the clear inference from the above evidence is that appellees realized that No. 2 board (and seconds) would be eliminated as soon as possible after the licenses were signed. Moreover, Lenci testified that, as he construed the bulletins, USG had put the price of No. 2 board on a level with No. 1 board (R. 2518–2519), which for all practical purposes eliminated it from the market.

longer. The price bulletins (Exs. 404, 410, 413, and 414; R. 6090, 6099, 6104, and 6106) reveal that by successive steps during a period of slightly more than six weeks the price of seconds was raised respectively to $15.00, $16.25, $17.50, and on July 9, 1929, to $20.00 per thousand. The differential in price between 3/8" Sheetrock at $22.50 per thousand and seconds was then only $2.50. By letter dated April 7, 1930, USG advised its licensees that thereafter the price of seconds would be the same as No. 1 board (Ex. 307, R. 5857). No price bulletins have been issued for seconds since that time, and they have been eliminated from the market."

D. Elimination of open-edge board

It was essential to the success of price control not only that seconds and No. 2 board be eliminated but that unpatented open edge board be taken off the market as well. The years 1927–29 had demonstrated beyond question that USG and its licensees could not maintain a price of $30 per thousand for Sheetrock, or even a price of $25, or $20 or $18, when faced with such open edge competition (Exs. 619, 620, 621; R. 6402–6418). As Lenci testified (R. 2970), the effect of having two competing products in the market was that as the price of open edge would be cut the price for closed edge would follow, and then open edge would go still lower. The witness Stormquist, of Universal, testified that he never knew, when being told by a dealer of a competitive price, whether it was for open edge or closed edge board, but that in order to sell he would have to meet the price quoted (R. 3573–3574).

"The court below found (Fdg. 91, R. 4162) that "the evidence fails to establish that there was an elimination of seconds * * *." "Every company unavoidably produces some seconds." It is of course immaterial whether some seconds are produced; the question is whether seconds have been eliminated from the market. The USG bulletin of April 7, 1930, referred to in the text, and apparently overlooked by the court below, effectually eliminated seconds from the market, since seconds obviously cannot be sold at the same price as No. 1 board. If it refers to production the court's finding is, therefore, meaningless; if to marketing it is clearly erroneous.

Griswold, of American, gave uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony to the same effect (R. 574):

> Q. Was this competition between No. 2 Board and the open-edge board and the No. 1 Board, and the variance in prices, was that one reason why you favored the license agreements, to eliminate competition?
> A. Well, I figured that if these people elected to take out a license, naturally they would want to manufacture the best board they could, which it was pretty universally recognized was this closed edge type board; and if they did that, naturally that would have a tendency to eliminate these other boards from the market because they were only put out to compete with and raise a disturbance, as a rule.

Holland, of Universal, was impatient with certain members of the industry for not joining the licensing plan; "this delay," he wrote, "is going to be the cause of demoralizing prices during most of 1929 unless the situation is handled promptly" (Ex. 204, R. 5369). His uncontradicted oral testimony makes it clear that he understood that a uniform product would contribute to stable conditions (R. 940).

> Q. Well, why were patents so necessary for the plan you had in mind, or why did you think they were necessary?
> A. Well, as I stated before, I thought the industry would be better off by a uniform and better product.

In 1928 Certain-teed was clearly of the opinion that USG wanted to drive open-edge board off the market, "thus restricting or eliminating competition which would otherwise have arisen between such unpatented 'open-edge' wallboard and the patented 'protected edge' wallboard" (Exs. 324, 212; R. 5947, 5376). After Certain-teed joined the plan in May 1929 by taking out a license, Geo. M. Brown made it completely clear that he understood the business advantage to be gained from making a single uniform product. In his memorandum of June 4, 1929 (Ex. 226, R. 5390), Brown wrote:

> They [USG] should be just as anxious to have us use this [bubble process] as we should be to get it if there are to be the *benefits that they anticipate in stabilizing the whole industry by making a uniform product and get away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had * * "[38]

Even in the initial negotiations between Blagden and Avery it was recognized that unless a licensing scheme could be worked out there would be serious competition from open-edge board. As Blagden put it (Ex. 185, R. 5344), Beaver "would naturally proceed to produce an open-edge or semi-open-edge" board and, moreover, "manufac-

[38] The court below in Finding 40 (R. 4151) found that Exhibits 324 and 212, concerning Certain-teed's expressed belief that USG intended by its licensing plan to dominate the industry and restrain competition, "are at most equivocal in meaning." That is, the court said Certain-teed might have changed its mind and reached the conclusion "that its statement concerning USG's purpose in bringing the suit was erroneous." Moreover, the court said the exhibits "do not establish bad faith in the execution of the license agreement."

In assuming that Certain-teed might have changed its mind the court evidently overlooked the Geo. M. Brown memorandum of June 4, 1929 (Ex. 226), quoted in the text, which indicates clearly that Brown had not changed his mind in this respect. He understood fully when he signed the license that the USG plan was intended as a means of "stabilizing the whole industry" (Ex. 226). Exhibits 324 and 212 are not susceptible of any interpretation other than what they say quite plainly; the finding of the court that they are equivocal in meaning consequently is clearly erroneous.

The latter part of the finding that the exhibits "do not establish bad faith in the execution of the license agreements" does not negative the fact that Certain-teed understood the purpose of the USG plan to stabilize the industry and gave its adherence to it.

turers other than" Beaver "would follow" its "example." At this time, as above noted, Certain-teed and others were preparing to enter the wallboard business.

Two exhibits, uncontradicted in any way, show that Avery understood fully the need for a uniform product if price control were to succeed. The point was made with reasonable clearness in the May 1929 licenses, the fifth "whereas" clause of which reads as follows (Ex. 3, R. 50):

> Whereas, Licensor has been unwilling to grant a license except on the express condition that the Licensee will manufacture plaster board or gypsum wallboard only with a folded or protected edge similar to that manufactured by Licensor * * *.

That is to say USG had openly insisted until May 1929, that only a closed-edge board should be made by its licensees. With the industry for the first time substantially all signed up under the license to make a closed-edge board—or pay a royalty anyway if it made open-edge board—USG was willing, as appears in the sixth "whereas" clause (R. 50), to waive the requirement. What the "fifth" whereas clause establishes, however, is that until May 1929, at least, USG had not wanted open-edge board on the market.

There is nothing to indicate that USG ever changed its position in this respect. In his report to the stockholders of USG for 1929, after the November licenses were in effect and open-edge board, Seconds, and No. 2 board had been substantially eliminated, Avery made clear what he expected the industry-wide agreements would accomplish (Ex. 332, R. 5986):

> The returns to be received [by way of royalties], while substantial, are relatively of a minor amount. The major benefits anticipated are * * * the increased consumption of wallboard products which should follow the quality improvements that a full and uniform use of the patented methods and products should assure.

Lenci testified on cross-examination that there was no "understanding" or "agreement" among the licensees that they would discontinue making an open-edge board (R. 3081–3082). The record shows, however, that Ebsary and the other licensees did discontinue making open-edge board immediately after the May licenses were signed (R. 2982, 2553). In fact, Lenci testified that it would have been difficult, if not impossible as a business matter, to pay a royalty on open-edge board as required by the license, and sell such board at a profit (R. 2983). Lenci's testimony on direct examination (R. 2983), therefore, to the effect that everyone expected to discontinue making open-edge board when the licenses were signed, accords with the facts, whether there was any "agreement" to that effect or not. This definitely establishes that there was at least an "understanding."

E. Standard size and packaging

Two other moves were made to produce a uniform product. In its price bulletin of May 24, 1929 (Ex. 408, R. 6097), USG wrote: "The standard size of patented gypsum plasterboard are: 32- and 48-inch widths, and from 4-ft. to 12-ft. lengths, inclusive." Subsequently a more elaborate and detailed description of so-called standard sizes of board was provided (Ex. 7 to complaint, R. 89). So-called nonstandard or odd sizes could be manufactured, but the bulletin provides that they could only be sold at price differentials which in some cases amounted to as much as $5 per thousand square feet (Ex. 7 to complaint, R. 93). The prescribed differentials are not only unrelated to the degree of variation from standard but are practically prohibitive.

The second move was to bring about a uniform method of packaging or "bundling" for lath and board. USG owned Birdsey patent No. 1,696,877 which related to a process for applying a gummed tape along the sides of a bundle of four or five pieces of lath. In the May 1929 agreements the purpose to force this type of bundle on the industry was made explicit: "It is expressly understood that licensee * * * will use only said bundle * * * and will not use any other bundle or method of bundling plasterboard * * *" (Ex. 3 attached to complaint, R. 52). When the November agreements were drafted this provision was omitted as probably no longer necessary, but it was provided that licensees should pay USG a royalty of ten cents (10¢) per thousand, "whether or not the bundles shall be made according to the claims set forth and claimed in said patents" (Ex. 6, attached to complaint, R. 75–76).[39]

F. Basing points and uniform billing weights

The fixing of uniform mill base prices, the elimination of seconds and open-edge board, and the standardization program were important

[39] The court in Finding 71 (R. 4157) found that the license provisions charging a royalty on all bundling, regardless of whether the USG method was used, "do not establish an attempt to standardize by eliminating other methods of packaging," and in Finding 72 (R. 4158), that "the license agreements were not executed with an intent to standardize in respect to the bundling patents."

The court appears to have based these findings on the further finding that "no other method was available" (Fdg. 71, R. 4157). The findings, accordingly, do not negative the fact that the royalty provision would operate, as charged, to bring about uniform packaging, and the appellees must be deemed to have known that and so intended when they signed the license agreements.

On June 10, 1929, Brown wrote Avery concerning the bundling matter that so far as he knew, "our plan of bundling has been meeting our requirements" but "we are anxious to do what the Industry does so as to have a uniform product" (Ex. 312, R. 5861). After receipt of Brown's letter the provision requiring use of the USG bundling was dropped, but the royalty provision was nevertheless included in the November agreements. It is a fair inference that, contrary to the court's findings, the industry intended to bring about a uniform method of packaging board.

moves directed to the control of prices and the elimination of competition. A further move was the inauguration of a basing point system. The first bulletin handed out by USG to its assembled licensees at the Palmer House on May 23, 1929, as above-mentioned, named only seven points, but from time to time other basing points were added until in 1939 there were a total of 24 (Ex. 33, R. 4863). At all times, however, there have been board mills at places not named as basing points.[40]

In order to obtain a uniform—and hence non-competitive—delivered price USG specified an arbitrary billing weight to be used by each licensee in calculating prices on rail shipments. The dealer price, in other words, was to "be the lowest combination mill price * * * and all rail freight from such mill to destination," calculated on the basis of the specified uniform bill-

[40] For example, Wheatland, New York, where Ebsary has its mill, was not made a basing point until June 10, 1939. Compare Ex. 33, R. 4863 and Ex. 33, R. 4846. Lenci testified that Ebsary construed the bulletin basing-point requirement, to be a "freight equalization" system, Ebsary's practice being to quote a price to dealers "based on the mill having the cheapest freight rate to the destination in question" (R. 2909). The latest bulletin in the record (Ex. 33, R. 4863), however, explicitly provides that prices "shall be the mill price listed below plus carload freight from producing mill to destination of the shipment." Then follows a list of 24 "producing mills," called in earlier bulletins basing points (Ex. 404, R. 6093). It will be noted, moreover, that this bulletin, while adding Wheatland as a "producing mill," has omitted Laramie, Wyoming, and Loveland, Colorado, which were listed in the bulletin of April 1, 1938 (Ex. 33, R. 4846).

ing weights (Ex. 7 to complaint, R. 89). In addition the licensees were each to charge exactly the same stop-over, switching, cartage, and other extra delivery charges. The result was that each licensee charged identically the same price to the dealer, either absorbing an extra freight cost or charging the dealer with phantom freight, depending on the location of its mill.[41]

The adoption of a uniform billing weight was necessary—if a uniform selling price was to be had—since different manufacturers made board of different weights. Griswold testified that American made a 3/8" board in 1920 weighing 2,000 to 2,100 pounds per thousand square feet (R. 478). The weight fixed by USG in the May 23, 1929, bulletin (Ex. 404, R. 6093) was 1,850 pounds. Then on May 25, 1931 (Ex. 33, R. 4623), the weight was reduced to 1,600 pounds; on July 23, 1936 (Ex. 33, R. 4757), to 1,400 pounds; on October 21, 1937 (Ex. 33, R. 4831), the weight was increased to 1,475 pounds; and in the last bulletin in evidence, that of June 10, 1939 (Ex. 33, R. 4863), the weight was still further increased to 1,525 pounds. Throughout these operations, if a manufacturer made a board lighter than the uniform weight he would charge a phantom freight, if heavier, he must absorb the freight.

[41] In Fdg. 18, R. 4143, the court below found that the price on board in USG's bulletins "was calculated on the basis of a mill base price plus freight from the nearest mill (freightwise) to the point of destination." This finding implies that all mills are basing-point mills but the bulletins in evidence do not support it. See footnote 40.

G. Truck deliveries and pick-ups

The delivery of gypsum products by truck presented a further problem to the industry which, as in the case of rail shipments, was handled in a manner to eliminate further competition between the appellees. In its bulletin of June 19, 1929 (Ex. 412, R. 6102), USG inaugurated a system of uniform delivered prices for board delivered by truck in designated areas. For example, 3/8" wallboard delivered in truck lots to dealers' warehouses in Brooklyn took a price of $25.60 per M square feet, while truck deliveries in Nassau, Long Island, and Westchester counties were assigned a delivered price of $26.35.

USG also inaugurated a new practice at this time (R. 2511) to fix the size of all truck loads. The minimum load which could be delivered to dealers in Brooklyn—at the bulletin price—was 10,000 square feet. In Westchester county the minimum load was fixed at 8,000 square feet (Ex. 412, R. 6102). Special truck rates were prescribed only for designated areas. The bulletins did not expressly forbid a licensee to deliver smaller quantities to a dealer in one load, or to deliver by truck outside of a designated area, but the only price designated by USG for such deliveries was the l. c. l. (less than carload) freight rate. This rate, Lenci testified, would have made the price to the dealer "so high that nobody would buy" (R. 3064); he construed the bulletins in practical effect, therefore, to prohibit such deliveries.

The location and extent of trucking areas was obviously a matter of great importance to the appellees. The bulletin of June 27, 1931 (Ex. 35, R. 5062), for example, designated only Niagara and Erie counties in the Buffalo area for truck deliveries. Thereafter National, which has a mill at Clarence Center, N. Y., arranged privately with USG for truck deliveries in the Rochester, Monroe County, area. On September 11, 1931 (Ex. 693, R. 6492), Baker of National wrote USG that "to protect our business"[42] we are following the arrangement agreed upon, "but feel that a definite schedule of prices on truck deliveries should be laid down and the area defined in an official bulletin." A week later, on September 18, 1931 (Ex. 35, R. 5060), USG issued a bulletin adding Orleans, Genesee and Monroe counties to the Buffalo trucking area.

The minimum size of truckloads permitted in the Buffalo area was fixed by the bulletin of September 18, 1931 (Ex. 35, R. 5061) at 5,000 square feet of board, or at 7½ tons in the case of mixed loads. This limit of 5,000 feet in Buffalo, compares with the limit of 8,000 or 10,000 feet in the New York area. From subsequent bulletins it appears that by "mixed loads" was meant "gypsum board and/or lath and other materials" (Ex. 38, R. 5234), or subsequently, "gypsum board and/or lath and other gypsum materials" (Ex. 38, R. 5231). The record is completely silent as to why USG prescribes the size of mixed loads made up, in addition to board, of plaster and other unpatented material.

The companion problem of how to handle so-called dealer "pick-ups" at mill or warehouse was discussed at the meeting between USG and its licensees on June 6, 1929 (R. 2538–9). Lenci testified that a statement was made that "it cost more at the mill, for instance, when a customer's truck backed in to be loaded with a small quantity of material, than would be the case in our usual course of business to take the material right from our kilns to the boxcar * * *" Thereafter USG proceeded to fix the permissible quantity of pick-ups. For example, the bulletin of August 12, 1932 (Ex. 34, R. 4981) read: "Minimum pick-up 5,000 sq. ft. board and/or lath." Later, on February 24, 1937 (Ex. 34, R. 4922), the amount was increased: "Minimum pick-up 7500 sq. ft. patented gypsum board products."

The consequence of these trucks and pick-up regulations has been that dealers throughout the Eastern area have been unable to buy at usual dealer prices less than 5,000 sq. ft. of gypsum board (R. 2885). Moreover, it appears from a letter written by Lenci on May 6, 1932 (Ex. 438, R. 6139), that the reason for these restrictions was not solely to account for differences in cost of handling small orders. Lenci in that letter says categorically, and the statement was not qualified upon cross-examination (R. 6139), that one of the reasons for the selling policy was to "make the dealer carry a sufficient stock."

These restrictions, of course, also eliminated all temptation on the part of USG and its licensees to compete with each other on a purely service level by accommodating a dealer with a small order of board when he may have run short of certain sizes.

H. Classification of dealers

At the licensee meeting of June 6, 1929, the problem of how to classify dealers was raised (R. 2535). For example, were mail order houses to receive a 10% discount from the dealer prices, as had been the practice (R. 2535), or were they to be sold as dealers? Were "house wreckers", known as "bathtub yards", to be classified as dealers? And, should the industry continue to sell the Federal government at the dealer price on direct sales? Lenci testified that "I expressed my views" that mail order houses should receive no discount (R. 2536). On the question of "bathtub yards" Lenci could not remember, but "if I took any position it would be that they were dealers" (R. 2537). In both cases Henning of USG agreed.

Henning further decided that, on direct sales, the government should be classified as a dealer (R. 2537). Lenci testified: "I don't remember what the comments were, but I believe everybody felt that was the right thing to do" (R. 2537). Under this policy the local dealer got nothing. On February 26, 1935 (Ex. 38, R. 5176), a bulletin was issued applicable to sales to the Federal Government for C. C. C. Projects, which provided for a maximum dealer commission of $1.50 per M sq. ft. on such sales. Then on October 31, 1935 (Ex. 38, R. 5138), in the case of direct sales to the Federal Government for W. P. A. Projects, it was ordered that the government was to be charged an advance over the regular dealer price of $2.50 per M sq. ft. on wallboard and $1.25 on lath. The bulletin provided further that these advances could be paid to dealers by way of commission.

I. Elimination of jobbers

Prior to May 23, 1929, it was customary in the gypsum industry, as in the mason's supply business generally (R. 1555, 1568), for manufacturers to distribute their products through distributors and jobbers (Ex. 617, R. 6394). Lenci testified that plaster and gypsum products other than wallboard are still sold in that way (R. 2898).

The May 1929 licenses, recognized the practice but, for the first time, required that licensees obtain USG consent before selling "manufacturers of plaster or gypsum products, or jobbers of such products, who do not or may not manufacture gypsum wallboard * * *" (Ex. 3, attached to complaint, R. 77-78).

The price bulletin of May 24, 1929 (Ex. 408, R. 6097), provided as follows:

> Minimum prices to Manufacturers and Jobbers of Gypsum Products—10% discount from minimum list prices as per our letter of May 23, applicable at all basing points.

The bulletin concluded with a request that: "You will please send us a list of the jobbers to whom you are selling patented board." At the licensee meeting of June 6, 1929, Henning of USG repeated the request and asked all those present to send him a list of the companies that were being sold as jobbers (R. 2534).

Ebsary replied on June 21, 1929 (Ex. 421, R. 6120), naming three jobbers or distributors: H. M. Coeyman Company, Newark, New Jersey; G. B. Raymond & Company, Long Island City, New York; Eastern Builders Supply Company, Baltimore, Maryland. American was insistent that it should keep its jobbers for, as Kling put it, "I feel as you do about their strangling us unless we have some protection" (Ex. 299, R. 5851). Later, on November 12, 1929, Kling asked Avery for "your approval of our (4) jobbers"—The Fairmont W. P. Co., The Toledo P. P. Co., The Cleveland Gypsum Company, and Abbey & Co. (Ex. 181, R. 5330).

At some time not disclosed in the record the November agreement was drafted to read differently than the May agreement, and no consent was required in the case of jobbers (Ex. 6 attached to complaint, R. 78). Avery's reply to Kling as to the reasons for this (Ex. 182, R. 5332) is illuminating:

> Fourth—You ask for our approval of your jobbers. Under paragraph 9 of the contract you have the right to sell jobbers (being those who do not manufacture but buy and sell plasterboard or gypsum wallboard in straight cars or in mixed cars with other building material and who do not sell at retail) without any approval from us. If the jobbers you name are regular jobbers as above stated, then you would have the right to sell the patented product to them. As to other manufacturers or wholesale distributors, then you must have our consent, this provision simply being to prevent the licensee from defeating the license by manufacturing for other manufacturers or wholesale distributors not within the jobber class and who may sell at any price they please as we have no right to control the re-sale price of persons to whom the licensee may sell the patented product.

By "defeating the license" Avery could only have meant defeating price control. In other words, since USG had no legal right to control the prices at which the 9 or more plaster manufacturers (called manufacturing distributors in the complaint) (R. 158) might resell board purchased from licensees, Avery thought it necessary to require a consent. The implication is irresistable that Avery intended, if it should ever develop that such manufacturing distributors were re-selling wallboard below the fixed dealer prices, to withdraw the USG consent, in order, as he said, not to defeat the license."[43]

Avery defined jobbers exactly as they were described in the November license agreement (Ex. 6 attached to complaint, R. 78). But plaster manufacturers, i. e., manufacturing distributors, also were—and still are—jobbers, in that they buy board in carload lots and resell to dealers at dealer prices. Why Avery saw the possibility of the "license" being defeated in the case of sales by the latter and not by the former is not obvious. Probably it was a maneuver to satisfy American that it could keep its jobbers. At all events, on November 25, 1929, American signed up. Less than a year later USG issued the price bulletin of August 8, 1930 (Ex. 430, R. 6130), which provided:

[43] In Findings 84, 81 (R. 4160, 4159) the court below found that the "clause of the licenses forbidding sales to manufacturing distributors without the written consent of USG was not intended to control the prices of such distributors, nor was it so used." The court, in making these findings, appears to have overlooked Avery's express statement in Exhibit 182 (R. 5332) that the provision was intended as a means of controlling the resale price of manufacturing distributors.

> Effective this date the price to jobbers and distributors is the same as the price to the regular dealer trade * * *.

The obvious purpose and effect of Exhibit 430 was to eliminate jobbers, as defined in the November agreement, from the gypsum industry.[*] Jobbers could not buy in car lots at dealer prices and resell to dealers at those same prices. And

[*] The court below made three findings directed to the point that there was no "intent" or "agreement" or "understanding" on the part of appellees when the licenses were executed or later that "jobbers would be eliminated" or that the "jobbers discount" would be discontinued (Fdgs. 75, 77, 101; R. 4158, 4159, 4164).

The court in making these findings appears to have relied on certain general testimony of Lenci and others that they had no specific intent or understanding that jobbers would be eliminated (R. 2898). But the court overlooked the fact that the broad purpose of the appellees was "to organize the industry and stabilize prices" (Ex. 185, R. 5339). To accomplish that broad purpose they delegated to USG the power to price jobbers out of the market whenever USG saw fit. USG determined to eliminate jobbers for the reason, as the court pointed out in its opinion (R. 4085), that jobbers set up an "unfair artificial competition" with USG and the licensees. Moreover, when USG issued its bulletin (Ex. 430, R. 6130), the licensees acted aggressively in concert to carry it out with the end result that jobbers have been wholly eliminated (R. 2997, 1991). It is submitted, therefore, that whether or not there was specific intent at the time of the agreement there was subsequent understanding and cooperation.

dealers would not buy at higher prices when they could buy directly from a licensee at bulletin prices. Higgins, a successful general mason's supply jobber, formerly with National, when asked whether he had ever tried to get a board connection on a jobber basis, testified (R. 1574):

> Well, having been in the industry for a period of nine years, I knew that I could not buy board and resell it at a profit as a jobber.

The uncontradicted testimony of Lenci and Tompkins (R. 2997, 1991) establishes beyond any question that jobbers have been eliminated. At Record 2997, Lenci testified:

> Q. But there are no jobbers who buy at a discount from the manufacturer and sell to the dealer at dealer prices?
>
> A. Not so far as our company is concerned.
>
> Q. And you don't know of any in the industry?
>
> A. No, not at the present time.
>
> Q. And insofar as that constitutes being a jobber, those jobbers are eliminated?
> A. Yes.[45]

[45] The court below (Fdg. 100, R. 4164) found that, in spite of the bulletin leveling off the price to jobbers with that to dealers (R. 6130), "Many jobbers continued to buy board and were able to perform a proper jobber's function." In explanation of this, the finding continues in Lenci's own words (R. 2996-2997), "There were small dealers who * * * were not able to buy or store board in the minimum quantities in which the licensees were required by the bulletins to sell it. A jobber * * * having adequate warehouse

J. Control of manufacturing distributors

After "jobbers" were eliminated, the industry continued to sell board on a jobber basis to manufacturing distributors, i. e., plaster manufacturers who buy board and resell to dealers. In all cases USG first gave its revocable consent to the licensee (R. 6236). For example, on November 30, 1934 (Ex. 38, R. 5183), a bulletin was issued consenting that all licensees might sell at a discount to Oakfield Gypsum Products Corporation and to Connecticut Adamant Plaster Company. On November 8, 1935 (Ex. 545, R. 6236), Ebsary was permitted to sell at a discount to Structural Gypsum Division of American Cyanimid. Other special consents were given from time to time.

At the licensee meeting of November 15, 1932 (R. 2666–2667), USG raised the discount from the space could, though he purchased at the dealer price, resell in small lots to such dealers at an advance, because of the service he thus rendered them."

The court in making this finding overlooked Lenci's further testimony, quoted above, which followed immediately. The court further completely overlooked the fact that jobbers had been defined in the November licenses and that what constituted jobbing, accordingly, was not open to question; as so defined, jobbers both "buy and sell" in straight cars or in mixed cars (R. 78). Moreover, the witness Higgins made it clear that the transaction described by the court as "a proper jobber's function" was not jobbing at all in the usual sense, but a relatively unimportant "warehouse business" (R. 1593). The court's finding that jobbers, in the customary sense in which that term is understood in the industry, have not been eliminated, has no basis. In any event the survival of one small class of jobbers would be immaterial.

initial flat 10% to 12½% on lath and 15% on board, where it has remained ever since. Manufacturing distributors, as plaster manufacturers, were potential board makers. Hansen of Oakfield testified that his company had from time to time considered starting a board mill (R. 3180–3181), since it was scarcely possible to sell plaster to a dealer unless his board requirements could be met at the same time. He further testified that the new discounts barely permitted his company to do business (R. 3181) and that it would have been economically impossible to sell below the established dealer prices (R. 3187).

On July 20, 1933 (Ex. 38, R. 5210) USG notified its licensees that its consent to sell manufacturing distributors at the 12½% and 15% discounts would thereafter be "restricted to sales of patented board and lath to said manufacturers for resale to the dealer trade at wholesale, and is not to apply to such materials sold at retail." This meant, in plain language, that manufacturing distributors must confine their sales to dealers or have their source of supply cut off. Gallagher, New York Sales Manager of USG, was notified on July 24, 1933 (Ex. 785, R. 6583) to be on the alert for sales made by manufacturing distributors "other than at wholesale."

In making sales to the dealer trade, moreover, manufacturing distributors were expected to conform both to the USG prices and methods of distribution. Tompkins (R. 1979–1980) testified that he furnished his distributors with his dealer prices. Kellog of Connecticut Adamant testified (R. 3408) that he obtained the dealer prices from USG when selling its board as a distributor. Similarly, the distributors were expected to conform to the minimum quantity regulations for truck deliveries and pickups as prescribed by USG for its licensees.

For example, on June 9, 1932 (Ex. 440, R. 6142) Ebsary wrote USG that Structural, a manufacturing distributor, was violating the 5,000 sq. ft. minimum pick-up regulation. Structural, which was being supplied by Kelley, would sell 5,000 sq. ft. to a dealer in one lot and then permit the dealer to pick it up in small amounts rather than in one load as required by the bulletin. USG did not reply at once, whereupon Lenci wrote (Ex. 443, R. 6144) that Ebsary was losing some of his "old customers" and demanded that the matter "be taken care of." On July 16, 1932 (Ex. 442, R. 6146) Lenci became explicit:

> * * * evidently Mr. Kelley is unable to control the actions of the Structural Company, and in as much as Kelley as a Licensee has to have your permission to sell the Structural as a Manufacturer below the Dealer's prices, we believe you will agree with us this permission should be withdrawn.

On August 1, 1932, Henning of USG wrote Lenci that: "This matter is being handled with the Kelley Plasterboard Company and we will advise you just as soon as we have their reply" (Ex. 444, R. 6147). Ten days later, on August 10, 1932, Gallagher, the New York sales manager of USG, at the request of Henning of USG, phoned Lenci concerning what had been done. According to Lenci, Gallagher advised him (Ex. 445, R. 6148):

> that Mr. Kelley had personally notified Mr. Williams [of Structural] that no further variations from the license agreement would be permitted and that if it happened once more he would cancel his contract with Structural.[46]

It is clear, moreover, that should a manufacturing distributor sell below bulletin prices or on better terms, he would very soon lose his source of supply. Tompkins, of Newark, when asked [46] On cross examination an attempt was made to weaken the force of the above exhibits (R. 2885). Lenci was led to explain that his complaint was not directed at Structural but at Kelley, that is, he was supposed to have thought that Kelley must be giving more than the usual 12½ to 15% discount, otherwise Structural could not have afforded to extend the small service of permitting dealers to pick up lots of less than 5,000 sq. ft. at one time. The explanation is not credible, as the cost of the extra service is obviously very small. Also, at this time Lenci believed the licensor had the legal right to control a distributor's sales (R. 3033), so that there was need to resort to such a roundabout explanation. The explanation, moreover, even if true, does not weaken the force of the evidence that pressure was actually brought to bear on Structural with the purpose and effect of forcing Structural to conform to the bulletin terms.

about what he would do in such situation testified (R. 1990):

> A. I don't remember my exact words, but what I meant to convey was that if we were selling to any manufacturing distributor or jobber at a discount, and that jobber or distributor took our material and sold it at a lower price than we were willing or able to sell, to our own customers, we would not continue selling him.
> Q. And that was exactly what Structural was doing in Philadelphia.
>
> A. Exactly.
>
> Q. So you refused to sell them any longer?
>
> A. That is correct.

The evidence is equally clear that the manufacturing distributors understood fully that they must comply with bulletin prices and terms. McCormack of Structural, when asked if he was under any obligation to sell at his supplier's prices, testified (R. 3381):

> I wouldn't say it was an obligation; it was good business sense to go along with those prices.

His reason was:

> If we undersold our source of supply, and continuously did it, I don't believe we would have a source of supply very long.[47]

[47] The court below, in Fdgs. 104, 105, and 106 (R. 4165), found that the defendants did not, by any of their operations, fix or control the resale prices of manufacturing distributors. It is submitted that when the above evidence is considered

K. Sales to other licensees

There have been a number of occasions when one licensee has purchased substantial amounts of board and lath from USG or another licensee for resale to its regular dealer trade (Ex. 271, R. 5799). For instance, in 1932 Certain-teed bought from USG its entire requirements of all types of board in the territory served by its North Holston mill (Ex. 241, R. 5413). C. O. Brown testified that all such board was sold at the same prices as that which it manufactured itself, that is, at USG bulletin prices (R. 1193, 1240).

The license agreements for so-called metallized board provide expressly that no licensee may manufacture and sell metallized board to another "without the written consent of Gypsum Company first obtained" (R. 4515). In 1940, for a period after Newark's board mill had burned down, Newark purchased from USG and other licensees with USG consent, all its requirements of board, lath, and metallized board at the usual manufacturing distributor discounts (R. 2026–2027). Tomkins testified that all such board was sold at in the light of Avery's blunt statement (Ex. 182, R. 5332), not mentioned by the court, that licensee dealings with distributors had been put on a consent basis for the purpose of maintaining price control, no other inference can reasonably be drawn than that appellees intended to control resale prices and that resale prices were controlled. In fact, manufacturing distributors were even forced to comply with bulletin terms and conditions of sale. Fdgs. 104, 105, and 106 are, therefore, clearly erroneous.

USG bulletin prices. He explained his reason as follows (R. 2027):

> —Well, during this period we wanted to maintain our position as manufacturers of board as nearly as we could. We didn't want to destroy the price structure that we expected to work under when we were again in operation.

This practice to sell at USG prices was likewise followed by Texas and National in the case of perforated lath. National made lath not covered by the USG perforated lath patent, Roos patent No. 1,938,354, and for a period sold substantial quantities to Texas (R. 3470–3471). Both National and Texas sold such perforated lath at USG prices (R. 1594, 3471).

With the general structure of its new distribution system established, the industry turned its attention to policing, in order to insure strict compliance with the bulletin provisions. In 1932 USG organized a wholly owned subsidiary corporation, Board Survey, Inc., to act as an enforcement agent. On March 4, 1932, USG notified its licensees that the company had been formed and invited them "to send in * * * all instances of violations of any of our * * * board license agreements which come to your attention * * *" (Ex. 432, R. 6132).

The procedure for hearing complaints was carefully stated (Ex. 432, R. 6132–6133). USG or any of the licensees making a complaint to Board Survey was to furnish "all the data you are able to collect evidencing the apparent violation." Board Survey would then make "a thorough check-up of all such reported violations" and "take such action as * * * necessary * * * to fully enforce our rights under license agreements * * * and to protect our rights and interests under our patents." In the next several years many complaints, some of which are discussed later herein, were filed with Board Survey and thoroughly checked up.

M. Licensee meetings

During the year 1932 USG conducted an audit of all of its licensees' sales of Gypsum board. It was authorized so to do by the license agreements (R. 77). According to USG the audit disclosed a great many violations, or supposed violations, of the license agreements. As a result (R. 2603), on October 17, 1932, USG held a licensee meeting at the Commodore Hotel in New York. According to Lenci, those present included Henning and MacLeish of USG; Neale of Atlantic; Kelley of Kelley Plasterboard; Ebsary, Hough, Lenci, and Diegal of Ebsary; Baker of National; C. O. Brown and E. G. Roos of Certain-teed; Black of American; and Holland of Universal (R. 2602). MacLeish, counsel for USG, conducted the meeting. "He was very much perturbed at the number of violations of the terms of the license bulletins" (R. 2603). The Ebsary Gypsum Company, for example, was alleged to have violated the licensing agreement 711 times, involving about 6,700,000 feet of board (R. 2603). According to Lenci, MacLeish then "made the statement that if the situation did not improve, there were only three things to do: either to cancel the licenses; or for the United States Gypsum Company to institute damage suits against the licensees; or to eliminate the price control feature entirely from the licenses" (R. 2603).

No licenses were cancelled; no damage suits were brought; and the industry did not give up price control (R. 2605). On the contrary, the meeting proceeded to a long and detailed consideration of the alleged violations. As Lenci testified. "Well, the whole idea of the bulletins was new, and a great many of the matters embodied in the bulletins were not clearly expressed, we couldn't understand them, and we naturally had to have the bulletins clarified" (R. 3006). Or, as he testified earlier, "there had been a tremendous number of bulletins issued, piecemeal, and honestly none of us could be blamed for making mistakes" (R. 2614).

The licensee meeting of October 17, 1932 (R. 2603) and the several meetings held thereafter went beyond what was necessary merely to clarify the bulletins. Several matters were brought up upon which there were no bulletin regulations. What the industry actually did at these meetings was to work out, concertedly, the details of the distribution system which had been established generally under the licensing plan. Some of these were incorporated into bulletins and became the written law of the industry. Among the topics covered were the following:

1. Commission men

At the meeting of October 17, 1932, for example, MacLeish brought up the licensees' practice of employing salesmen on a commission basis (R. 2613). He said that "the audit showed that these commission men, if they didn't have a good mouth, would be very apt to give part of their commissions away to the customer, and that therefore the employment of commission men was a bad practice" (R. 2613). Not only was it a bad practice, but it, he said, "would have to be discontinued" (R. 2613).

The members of the industry present made no objection. According to Lenci (R. 2613), "Well, there were very few commission men employed, and the ones who had them said that they would be glad to rearrange them and put them on a salary basis." One week later, on October 24, 1932, USG issued a bulletin (Ex. 38, R. 5221) which provided that it would be a violation of the license for any licensee to pay a commission to a salesman even though he sold at dealer prices and did not split commissions with the dealer. Moreover, commission salesmen were not to be employed in any case "without the written consent of licensor."

At the licensee meeting of November 15, 1932, USG again brought up the subject, with a statement that commission men "must be cleaned up" (R. 2668). At this time Lenci objected that Ebsary would not make any change until Atlantic had done something about a commission man in its employ (R. 2668). At the next meeting, December 13, 1932, Henning said that "now all commission men had been cleared up * * * with the exception of Blanchfield and Parker" (R. 2672) employed by Ebsary. Lenci replied that they would be "taken care of." Thereafter Blanchfield was put on a salary basis and "we let Parker go" (R. 2672).[46]

2. Dunnage

Another matter brought up by MacLeish at the October 17, 1932, meeting related to dunnage (R. 2607). The complaint, according to Lenci, was "that the licensees were putting in an unusual number of boards as culls, for packing, which in reality were first-class material and in a way were a rebate." MacLeish said the practice "would have to cease" (R. 2607). At the meeting of November 15, 1932, Lenci made a complaint that Atlantic, a licensee, was using an unnecessary amount of board as dunnage (R. 2659–2660). Whereupon Henning asked that each licensee mail to Board Survey a complete statement of the amount and kind of dunnage it used (R. 2660).

At the meeting of December 13, 1932, Henning announced that each of the eight licensees had made a dunnage report (R. 2680). The average was 610 sq. ft. per car and, according to Lenci, Henning then said that "as most of the companies were using between 500 and 600 square feet, that that would be considered a fair amount of board, a proper amount of board to be used as dunnage to properly pack the car" (R. 2680). The licensees were also "asked to use, as far as possible, narrow strips, that is, boards not over 12 inches wide, * * *" and whenever wider board was used it should be stamped "dunnage."

On December 22, 1932, USG issued a bulletin (Ex. 38, R. 5217) dealing with the matter. In later bulletins the regulations were further elaborated, and also made to apply to truck deliveries. For instance, it was later provided that all gypsum board used for dunnage "shall be plainly stamped in red on the face side of each board, showing the words 'Dunnage—Not to Be Sold' in letters at least 3" high, and be defaced, marred, diagonally scored or mutilated, and otherwise so marked that they will have no value and will be unfit for use or resale" (Ex. 37, R. 5099).

3. Trade discounts and payments

The subject of "discounts" was brought up by MacLeish at the October 17, 1932, license meeting (R. 2606). Previously, on April 12, 1932, USG had issued a bulletin (Ex. 38, R. 5242), in which it had said that "extending other than regular terms" to dealers or other buyers would be construed as a rebate and in violation of the minimum price provisions of the license. Some or all of the licensees, it was charged, had granted excessive discounts contrary to this regulation (R. 2606).

At the meeting on December 13, 1932, Henning brought the matter up again. Terms in the lumber trade often run 30, 60, 90 or 120 days, while in the cement, lime, and gypsum business shorter terms had prevailed. Lenci testified that "we didn't want to have—you see, at this time this was in the low part of the depression—we didn't want to have all our money let out on these long terms if we could avoid it, and we wanted to hold the gypsum end of the business into the 2 percent 10-day group, or 30 days net, rather than have it drop into the lumber classification. We were asked by the licensor not to offer these long terms as an inducement in order to make sales" (R. 2682). Everyone present agreed with the licensor, for as Lenci said, "We all felt it was a good thing"[49] (R. 2683).

The phrase "other than regular terms" in the bulletin was also intended to regulate the medium of payment. MacLeish, at the October 17, 1932, meeting complained that National had taken Chicago World's Fair bonds in payment for wallboard (R. 2612). Later, at the meeting of December 13, 1932, Henning told the licensees that they "were not to voluntarily offer to take notes, or offer to take trade acceptances, or offer to take bonds or other securities, in lieu of cash," as an inducement to make a sale (R. 2683). On July 29, 1933 (Ex. 782, R. 6580) Board Survey investigated a complaint that National had accepted certificates of deposit in a closed bank as payment.

How to quote prices in bidding on contracts was regulated. It was considered a violation of the license to deduct in advance the amount of the cash discount (Ex. 37, R. 5097). In making quotations to the U. S. Government, however, the regular minimum delivered price less 2% (cash discount) was to be used (R. 5097). In either case all bids were to be identical.

Nothing, it seems, was too small to regulate in order to eliminate all possible competition.

[49] It will be noted that Lenci speaks of uniform discount terms as "a good thing" for the licensees, and not as necessary to provide pecuniary reward to USG for its patent monopoly.

4. Warehousing and consignment sales

The bulletin of April 12, 1932 (Ex. 38, R. 5242), provided, without qualification, that the establishment or continuance of warehouses by a licensee at a dealer's place of business would be construed "as a rebate and in violation of the minimum price" provisions of the license. Likewise, "consigning of stocks" to a dealer was construed as a rebate. The effect of these two provisions was to prohibit dealer warehousing and to eliminate all sales on consignment.[50]

Both matters were discussed by MacLeish at the licensee meeting of October 17, 1932 (R. 2609). Lenci testified that under the bulletins, as he understood them, a licensee was not permitted to rent warehouse space from a dealer (R. 2609, 3023, 6178). The "business reason" for the prohibition was "Because the thing was not done for the purpose of renting space, it was done for the purpose of influencing sales" (R. 2610). Likewise, shipments of goods to a dealer for sale on consignment was regarded by the industry "as very bad business" (R. 3024). And, it was Lenci's understanding, that that was the reason for the bulletin provision forbidding them (R. 3025).

[50] On May 31, 1932 (Ex. 453, R. 6155), Lenci complained to Board Survey that USG was shipping board on consignment to two dealers contrary to the bulletin. He testified that the practice gave a distinct competitive advantage to any manufacturer still employing it (R. 2877).

In the competitive era prior to May 1929, selling on consignment was a recognized industry practice. Henning reported that USG had in 1927 signed up some 230 consignment contracts with dealers (Ex. 619, R. 6403). During the first half of 1928, USG shipped over 20,000,000 sq. ft. of board to dealers on a consignment basis (Ex. 620, R. 6413). For the first quarter of 1929 USG had some 843 dealers on a consignment basis, who sold some 5,897,501 square feet of board (Ex. 621, R. 6416). The evident purpose of the bulletins was to eliminate this type of competition and put the entire industry on a "regular terms" sales basis.

5. Policing the jobber regulation

The matter of selling jobbers at a discount was brought up by MacLeish at the October 17, 1932 meeting. According to Lenci, "Well, as I recall it, my best recollections is that the discussion was that a bulletin had been issued which put jobbers and dealers on the same basis, but that in spite of that, some of the licensees had continued to sell jobbers at a discount below the dealer price" (R. 2611). There evidently was no particular discussion, "MacLeish made a statement that it was one of the things that would have to be corrected" (R. 2611).

At the next licensee meeting, on November 15, 1932, a number of jobber situations were discussed. According to Lenci, Kelley reported that Dusol was no longer "being sold at a special discount as a jobber, but was being sold as a dealer" (R. 2667). Kelley also reported that "he would sell Paragon Plaster Company of Syracuse, the Paragon Plaster and Supply Company of Scranton, and the American Hardwall Plaster Co. of Utica as dealers and not as jobbers" (R. 2668–2670). At the December 13, 1932, meeting, Kelley complained that USG was soliciting business from one Cartier on a jobbing basis (R. 2672). Two or three other similar complaints were made (R. 2678–2679).

During this period and sporadically thereafter a number of complaints concerning jobbers were made to Board Survey. For example, on May 6, 1932 (Ex. 438, R. 6139), Ebsary complained that Certain-teed sold to Orin F. Perry as a jobber. Board Survey replied on August 18, 1932 (Ex. 451, R. 6153), that it had not completed its investigation. On November 28, 1932 (Ex. 471, R. 6173), Ebsary again complained about Perry and concluded with the statement: "This is in direct violation of the Bulletins eliminating sales of licensee board through jobbers and commissionmen." Again, on November 8, 1934, Ebsary wired to USG: "Lee Story must be eliminated as a jobber" (Ex. 502, R. 6197).[51]

[51] The court below found that the exhibits discussed in the text "do not establish concerted action to 'eliminate' jobbers" but show only "that particular licensees had made arrangements with jobbers * * * in violation of the minimum price bulletins" (Fdg. 102, R. 4164).

The exhibits mentioned by the court are not, of course, to be considered alone. When considered in the light of

6. Truck deliveries to the job

At the licensee meeting of December 13, 1932, a matter concerning truck deliveries to the job was discussed (R. 2683–2686). From the first, the bulletins had quoted only a price "to dealers' warehouses" (Ex. 412, R. 6102). Subsequent bulletins also restricted the licensees to use of their own trucks or those of independent owners; dealers' trucks could not be hired (Ex. 35, R. 5054). The complaint at this meeting was that some dealers, when receiving a truck delivery from a licensee, would pay the driver a small sum to carry the load on and deliver it at the job. Henning of USG took the position that this was actually the same as if "the manufacturer was making the job delivery" (R. 2686), and that where the licensees hired trucks "we would have to see that they abided by our regulations just as though they were our own trucks" (R. 2684).

So far as appears no further job deliveries were made by licensees. But the question did come up all the evidence showing that jobbers were in fact eliminated, they establish clearly that the actions of Ebsary as set forth in the exhibits contributed to that end.

The latter part of the finding is curiously misleading. Lenci, on cross-examination, was led to explain that when he wired: "Lee Story must be eliminated as a jobber" (Ex. 502, R. 6197) he really meant that "Kelley must cease giving Lee Story a jobber's discount" (R. 2924). Obviously, whichever reading is adopted, it does not alter the fact that pressure was being brought to eliminate Lee Story as a jobber, and that he was eliminated. The finding is, accordingly, either immaterial or clearly erroneous.

later in the case of manufacturing distributors. On November 17, 1937, Tomkins, of Newark, a licensee, wrote Oakfield, its manufacturing distributor, as follows (Ex. 380, R. 6067):

> I had luncheon yesterday with Harry McCormick, and he told me there had been a good deal of excitement among the dealers in Philadelphia several days ago owing to the fact that a shipment of Oakleaf Lath had been delivered directly to the job at 52nd and Spruce Streets. Will you please investigate this matter, as I think it possible we may be called upon for some explanation. I am sure that neither you nor any of your affiliates would knowingly make direct job deliveries in the areas where they are not permitted, and I am simply passing this on for your information.

Thereafter a formal complaint was made by Board Survey (Exs. 381, 382; R. 6068, 6069); Tomkins transmitted it to Oakfield for report (Ex. 383, R. 6070); Oakfield replied explaining the situation (Ex. 384, R. 6071); and on January 3, 1938 (Ex. 385, R. 6072), Tomkins reported to Board Survey.

Under date of May 17, 1938 (Ex. 387, R. 6074), Bartlett of USG wrote Tomkins in connection with another complaint that a manufacturing distributor was delivering directly to the job:

> In further connection with my memo of the 5th instant advising you of apparent violation of trucking regulations, I have been informed that Structural Gypsum Co., and Newark Plaster Co. (Kelly Cork Lath) are making a regular practice of delivering material direct to jobs.

The fact that in both of these cases Tomkins was able to deny that any violation took place does not negative the fact that the direct to job trucking restriction was being strictly policed and enforced and with the full approval of USG.

7. Control of advertising

The advertising policies of the licensees also came in for discussion at the meeting of October 17, 1932 (R. 2607). MacLeish complained that "a great many of the dealers were demanding that the licensees buy advertising matter, or paint fences for them,[32] or decorate their offices, or furnish materials with which to fix up their offices, and things of that kind * * * without charging for it" (R. 2607). MacLeish said, according to Lenci, that such "advertising policy would have to be corrected" (R. 2607).

At the meeting of November 15, 1932, someone complained that National had given away seven boards to Feldman Lumber Company (R. 2662). Lenci explained, "That was a complaint in connection with the matter of advertising, that is, giving away boards for completing work in a customer's office." (R. 2662). On November 21, 1932, Board Survey investigated National's complaint that Universal had donated $100 to a dealer "for their ball club" (Exs. 779, 780, R. 6578, 6579). In the next few years a number of similar complaints were made.

[32] "A dealer would decide that he wanted to repaint his whole place, fences and everything else, and on the fence there would be a small sign of one of the manufacturers, but the manufacturer would have to spend the money to do the whole job" (R. 2608).

The matter of advertising on dealers' fences, for example, gave trouble. On May 21, 1935, someone complained that Certain-teed had allowed a Chicago dealer $120 to paint a Certain-teed sign extending 65′ along the dealer's fence (Ex. 770, R. 6568). Certain-teed replied that its Sales Department had "misinterpreted our advertising policy," but pointed out that the sign replaced a similar one advertising USG products (Ex. 771, R. 6569). On June 14, 1935 (Ex. 772, R. 6570), Certain-teed was charged with painting a sign 8′ x 8′ referring exclusively to its products in front of a Des Moines, Iowa, dealer's office. And a year later, on June 6, 1936, Certain-teed was called to account for granting an allowance to a West Virginia dealer for painting a sign advertising Certain-teed products (Exs. 774, 775, 776, R. 6572–6576).

On May 10, 1935, Board Survey sent a letter to all of the licensees asking for "a statement of your policies" regarding "advertising allowances, painting dealers' signs, donations of patented gypsum board for dealers' offices, donations of carpenters aprons or the sale of such below cost, and concessions of a like nature" (Exs. 558, 719, R. 6249, 6523). Thereafter, in its bulletin of September 16, 1935 (Ex. 37, R. 5114), USG provided broadly that minimum prices must not be reduced "by allowance for any other reason whatsoever." In its bulletin of February 6, 1939 (Ex. 37, R. 5093), the licensees were expressly forbidden to grant "allowances for advertising or other purposes," as constituting rebates.

N. Exclusion of Cardiff Gypsum Company because of price cutting on plaster

The Cardiff Gypsum Company has for many years owned gypsum properties in the vicinity of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and operated a plaster mill at that place (R. 3229). Its plaster and other related products are widely sold throughout the middle west (R. 3229). The company has at no time manufactured gypsum board or lath (R. 3229). Its position in the gypsum industry has thus long been substantially that of Oakfield Gypsum Products Corporation, Connecticut Adamant Plaster Co., and the other manufacturing distributors named in the bill of particulars to the complaint (R. 158).[53]

[53] Cardiff could not be named in the bill of particulars as a manufacturing distributor since it had never been permitted by the industry to buy board at the general industry discount.

In June 1933, Sensibar of Cardiff asked Holland of Universal "whether we might not make arrangements so that Cardiff would be sold board on the customary industry basis" (R. 3237). Sensibar meant by this at the "discount of 15 percent on long board and 12½ percent on lath" applying in the case of manufacturing distributors (R. 3238). Holland stated that the matter was one requiring USG consent. Later he took the matter up with USG, but was unable to get their consent. Holland explained the USG action, according to Sensibar, as follows: "He told me that there was a general impression in the industry that Cardiff had been cutting prices on gypsum plaster; that he doubted, under those circumstances, whether we could make a connection to get board" (R. 3238).

During the summer of 1933 Sensibar saw Henning of USG and explained that the status of Cardiff had changed due to changes in stock ownership, and expressed the hope that the company "would be treated a little differently than they had been in the past" (R. 3240). In reply, "Mr. Henning confirmed the fact that it was the impression around his organization that Cardiff had been a price-cutter in the plaster field, and that this was not a very propitious time to talk about such a matter as I wanted to discuss; but that after a little experience with the new policy of Cardiff, the situation might be better" (R. 3241).

In the course of the next several years Sensibar tried to buy board at a discount from American, in 1933 to 1936 (R. 3241–3245, 3257–3259); Certain-teed, in 1933 (R. 3245–3247); National, from 1936 to 1938 (R. 3260–3270); in 1939, from Ebsary (R. 3291–3293). In the case of American, for example, he pointed out to Black "that it ought to be a very good thing for his company, especially since our sales territory reached out a good deal farther than his sales territory did, and in that way that it might increase his business immeasurably" (R. 3243). Black was in full accord with this argument (R. 3243). In each case, however, USG refused to give its consent.

Sensibar had a further conversation with Henning in 1935 with a view to obtaining board at a discount from USG (R. 3252). Henning's answer again was the same: "that there were people in his organization who were still not willing to believe that we would sell, or continue to sell, plaster at the going prices" (R. 3252). Then in 1938 he saw Keady of USG and told him that Cardiff had "adhered to the sales practices established by USG" and that "it simply wasn't a healthy thing for a large company, dominating that kind of a situation, to keep a small competitor from having the same recognition as other people" (R. 3265). Sensibar, shortly after, discussed the matter with Knode, President of USG, and Cardiff was then finally refused the right to buy board at a discount (R. 3268).

O. Control of plaster prices

The Cardiff evidence, related above, admits of only one inference, that USG and the gypsum industry sought to maintain a stable price for plaster, as well as for board. In fact, as pointed out earlier, it was assumed from the outset by Avery that if the board market could be improved and stabilized it "naturally would follow" that plaster prices would likewise be improved and stabilized (R. 622). The court below found that there was, in fact, an "increase in price of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products over the price during the 1927–1929 price war * * *" (Fdg. 94, R. 4162).[54]

The industry took positive measures to insure that plaster prices would be stabilized. Gypsum board and lath is sold to dealers in combination with plaster and other products. The industry very early [54] The court further found that the defendants did not "raise, maintain, or stabilize" the prices of plaster by any "device" or "action" or by any of their "operations under the license agreements" (Fdg. 94, R. 4162).

This finding completely ignores not only the evidence as to Cardiff referred to in the text, but the basic point that everyone understood that by getting together under the board licenses the prices of plaster and related products would improve (Ex. 141, R. 5293). Moreover, the evidence discussed in the text concerning the bulletin price rebate provisions (Ex. 37, R. 5092) and the Board Survey policing activities show conclusively that the defendants did employ various devices to stabilize prices on plaster. The finding is, therefore, clearly erroneous.

recognized, moreover, that any variation in plaster prices would have a direct bearing on the sale of board. If board prices were to be stabilized, therefore, the price of plaster and of other products customarily sold with board would likewise have to be stabilized (Ex. 147, R. 5298).

One of the first instances of industry control concerned a sale by National of board in combination with a quantity of fiber insulating board, called Maftex. Ebsary complained at the licensee meeting of November 15, 1932, that National "in trying to make a sale of gypsum board to Axinn Brothers, were maintaining the price of gypsum board but quoting an unsually low price on the Maftex board which was, in effect, unduly influencing the sale" (R. 2661). The matter was thereupon turned over to Baker of National to investigate, (R. 2661). In the next several years many such complaints concerning plaster and other products sold in conjunction with board were made to Board Survey.

For example, on June 15, 1933, Board Survey wrote Ebsary that one of its dealers had sold board at a price which would "hardly seem possible if your sales of patented board had been made at the licensor's minimum price," and that "It is further alleged that your sales of plaster to this firm have been at less than the market price, same being made so as to reflect to this customer a lower price on its purchases of patented board than the licensor's minimum price to you" (Ex. 494, R. 6189).

Ebsary replied on June 20, 1933 (Ex. 495, R. 6190), that its sales of board had been strictly in accordance with the bulletins and further that, "Our sales of plaster to this company are made on the same basis as the prevailing prices made by our competitors for similar business and are not made by us with the intent to influence board sales."

A summary of a number of other typical complaints investigated by Board Survey, in which it was charged that prices had been cut on plaster and other products in order to influence the sale of board, follows:[55]

> In Exhibit 499 (R. 6194), dated June 13, 1933, USG complains to Board Survey that Ebsary is cutting prices on plaster; in Exhibit 497 (R. 6192), Board Survey writes Ebsary and asks for an explanation; in Exhibit 498 (R. 6193), Ebsary replies and denies price cutting.
> In Exhibit 500 (R. 6195), dated April 24, 1934, Board Survey complains to Ebsary that Ebsary is cutting prices on "other commodities"; in Exhibit 501 (R. 6196), Ebsary replies denying cutting prices on board and states that the "other materials were paid for at the prices prevailing in the New York market."

[55] In addition to the exhibits summarized, the following also relate to Board Survey complaints that USG or one of the licensees was cutting prices on plaster, other unpatented gypsum products, roofing material, insulating board or other commodities (Exs. 703 thru 708, R. 6501–6506; Exs. 710, 711, R. 6508, 6509; Ex. 713, R. 6511; Ex. 731, R. 6530; Exs. 733 thru 745 (except 740), R. 6532–6545; Exs. 748 thru 754, R. 6547–6553; Exs. 760 thru 769, R. 6559–6567).

In Exhibit 727 (R. 6527), dated June 13, 1933, USG complained to Board Survey that Certain-teed was selling plaster at less than its regular price.

In Exhibit 729 (R. 6528), dated November 14, 1932, Board Survey complains to Certain-teed that it is cutting the price of plaster; in Exhibit 730 (R. 6529) Certain-teed replies that the board was sold at Bulletin prices "and the other products in the car were priced at our regular schedule."

In Exhibit 746 (R. 6544), dated April 24, 1934, Board Survey complains to Certain-teed that it sold a mixed car of board and "other gypsum commodities" and that it cut prices on the other gypsum materials; in Exhibit 747, (R. 6546) Certain-teed replied that the plaster was sold at $1.00 per ton higher than other manufacturers were charging for it.

In Exhibit 758 (R. 6557), Certain-teed complains to Board Survey that National was cutting the price on board and "other items" in a mixed car sold to a Kentucky dealer; in Exhibit 759 (R. 6558), Board Survey demanded from National "a verified statement from you fully reporting your sales of such wallboard" covering a period of six months and "including any and all allowances then or subsequently made effecting such shipment."[56]

The bulletin provision relative to price cuts on plaster and other materials is as follows:

> Rebates, Allowances, Etc. Any sale of patented products, though ostensibly made at or above the minimum price established by licensor, will nevertheless be considered a violation of the provisions of the license if licensee directly or indirectly reduces the actual price charged by licensee below such minimum * * * by reducing the price of other products * * * (Ex. 37, R. 5092).

[56] The court below in Findings 96 and 97 (R. 4163) found that the exhibits there mentioned involved complaints that Ebsary or certain other licensees had violated the minimum price on board through the device of "giving away plaster" or other products to a dealer, "and do not establish that defendants or any of them raised, maintained, or stabilized the prices of unpatented materials." These findings represent a complete misreading of all of the exhibits mentioned by the court except Exhibits 489–493, and these five exhibits related to but one isolated complaint. None of the complaints, except as noted, had to do with a charge that plaster or other commodities were being given away, or sold at an abnormally low price; on the contrary they all had to do with charges that Ebsary or some other licensee had sold plaster or other unpatented commodities at less than the established or market price.

It is submitted that when these exhibits are read in the light of the other evidence in the case they establish affirmatively that the defendants did raise, maintain, and stabilize the price of plaster and other materials as charged in the complaint.

The witness, Lenci, testified that he knew of no "agreements" or "prior understanding, oral or written, that certain prices would be established" for board, "and what those prices would be" (R. 2992). But he understood fully that the license agreement itself would operate to stabilize board prices (R. 2992). Similarly, Lenci testified that there was no "understanding" or "agreement" with respect to what price he should quote or charge for plaster (R. 2993). But Lenci understood from the beginning that he would not be permitted to sell plaster in order to influence board sales (R. 2993).

When asked specifically whether the result would not be, in a measure, to stabilize his plaster prices, Lenci admitted, "It might have that effect, yes" (R. 2993).[57] Prior to 1929 Lenci said he [57] The court below found that there was at no time an "understanding" among USG and the licensees that prices on plaster or any unpatented gypsum products would be stabilized, raised or fixed and that the license agreements were not executed with that intent (Fdgs. 56, 73, and 94; R. 4154, 4158, 4162).

Lenci's testimony makes it clear, contrary to the court's finding, that he understood that the signing of the license agreements would have a tendency to stabilize both board and plaster prices. Blagden (Ex. 185, R. 5339) pointed out to Avery that the licensing scheme would enable Avery "to organize the industry and stabilize prices." Griswold, in Exhibit 141 (R. 5293), put the matter this way: "* * * There is no question but that if the Wall Board market were fixed up the Wall Plaster market would automatically be affected at the same time." See also R. 622.

Holland of Universal understood that the license agreements would have a stabilizing effect on plaster prices. In could make any change in plaster prices that he saw fit to influence the sale of board (R. 2994). He described the situation thereafter as follows (R. 2995):

> Q. And subsequent to that, you could not make an adjustment in the price of plaster for purposes of influencing the sale of board; isn't that correct?
>
> A. That is correct, but I don't know where you would draw that line as to how much of a cut in plaster was made in order to sell the plaster, and how much of the cut was for the purpose of influencing the board sale. I couldn't tell you where that point would be.
>
> Q. Well, I wouldn't know, either. But the bulletin—and I refer to Government's

Exhibit 147 (R. 5298) he stated: "I am afraid nothing can be done toward stabilization until the board matter is entirely out of the way. I believe that Mr. Avery has been very definite in a statement to that effect * * ." At R. 909–910, Holland was asked what he meant by the term "stabilization," as used above, and his reply was, " * * I would assume it had reference to the hope that the downward spiral of prices in the gypsum industry would stop."

Certain-teed and National understood that the agreements would stabilize plaster prices. In Exhibit 203 (R. 5368), Walker of Certain-teed is quoted as saying that, "* * * Brown would not be willing to take out a license agreement with USG on board unless it carried with it a general clearing up of unsatisfactory conditions of all gypsum products. * * " In Exhibit 200 (R. 5362), a National board of directors minutes, it was recorded " * * that the United States Gypsum Company has been working on a plan to stabilize the Gypsum Industry * * *."

In the face of such unequivocal evidence the court's findings are clearly erroneous.

Exhibit 37, page 923—doesn't make any distinction as to whether it is large or a small reduction in plaster prices which might influence the sale of board?

A. I know that.

Later, in Lenci's testimony he made it clear that he was largely influenced by the USG prices on plaster in setting his own prices. "We would have to be, it would be the condition of the market. We couldn't get more, and we naturally wouldn't want to sell for any less" (R. 3054). When this testimony is considered in the light of the fact that Board Survey was actively policing plaster prices and all provisions of the bulletins, the inference is irresistible that appellees have controlled the price of plaster and other unpatented gypsum products.[58]

The court below in Finding 19 (R. 4143) found that "During the periods when price bulletins were sent out by USG to its licensees, each licensee, in the main, sold gypsum board manufactured by it at the prices and upon the terms and conditions stipulated in the bulletins." This finding sets at rest any question of fact not only as to whether board was sold at ostensibly correct prices, but as to whether all the bulletin terms and conditions as above discussed were obeyed by the industry. Since the bulletin (quoted supra, p. 156) specifically prohibits reducing prices on board, "by reducing the price of other products," this finding as to compliance with the conditions of the bulletin in itself shows that prices of plaster and other unpatented Gypsum products were stabilized and controlled by appellees to the extent that they came within the scope of this provision.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED

Appellant specifies as errors to be urged each of the errors assigned (R. 4178–4186) except numbers 8 through 11 (R. 4179). In substance, these assignments present the questions enumerated under the caption "Questions Presented" (supra, pp. 2–4) and, in addition, challenge all or part of each of the following Findings rendered by the court below: Numbers 11–12, 16–18, 24–30, 35–37, 39–40, 43, 53–54, 56–59, 61, 64, 66–67, 69, 71–75, 77, 80–81, 83–87, 89–91, 93–97, 99–102, 104–107, 109–110, 116–118.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

A. A combination among all the members of an industry, being erstwhile competitors, to organize the industry and stabilize prices by means of patent license agreements containing price fixing provisions is unlawful. Price fixing combinations are unlawful per se. It is well settled that though the means employed by the combination to fix prices be lawful when looked at as isolated transactions, they may nevertheless be steps in an unlawful scheme or conspiracy. Patent licenses stand on no different footing. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265. In Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, the Court was not concerned with an industry-wide program designed to fix prices and eliminate competition. Each merely held that the license contract before the Court, when viewed as an isolated transaction, was not unlawful.

B. The evidence viewed as a whole and in context undeniably establishes the existence of such a conspiracy. In 1926, before any license agreements had been signed, Blagden of Beaver told Avery that USG, by virtue of its ownership of the Utzman patent, had an opportunity, by getting general industry recognition of its patents, "to organize the industry and stabilize prices" and thus "avoid the necessity of a reduction * * * of current prices to meet competition." In addition, Blagden offered to induce competitors to become licensees under USG's Utzman patent. Therafter, Blagden and Griswold, with the knowledge and approval of Avery, engaged actively in promoting industrywide licensing with price control. Their activities, supplemented by the assistance of others, resulted in a number of licenses being taken out under the Utzman patent between 1926 and 1929. In the latter year, at the height of a bitter price war and eleven weeks before the Utzman patent expired, substantially all of the existing licensees and those who had not yet become licensees met in Chicago with Avery. At this meeting all of those who were then manufacturing the competing open-edge board, except American and Kelley, became licensees under the Utzman patent. Avery then handed out the first of a series of so-called price bulletins which raised prices and established an elaborate non-competitive pattern of distribution for the industry.

Prior to this time some of the prospective licensees had questioned the advisability of signing licenses under the Utzman patent, since it would shortly expire and price control could not be maintained thereafter. Avery advised them that if the plan could not be worked out under the Utzman patent, there were other patents available. Holland actively promoted the plan in order to improve financial conditions in the industry. At the May 1929 meeting, Avery advised the licensees of rights which USG proposed to acquire by patents on so-called "foam" board and suggested that the industry take out licenses with price control. These patents were in interference and their issuance was delayed. Avery then purchased from Universal the Haggerty "starch" patent, a narrow improvement patent of doubtful validity. Thereafter all competitors became licensees under this patent and the Roos "foam" applications. The drastic regulation of the industry which had been begun in May was continued to the extent that every competitive factor has now been eliminated from the industry.

The finding of the lower court that the evidence did not establish a conspiracy to fix prices was largely influenced by an erroneous interpretation of the applicable law in that it was of the opinion that the conspiracy would be unlawful only if the licenses were "sham"—that is, not meant to be adhered to. In addition the court erroneously held that declarations were not admissible against all defendants until the unlawful nature of the conspiracy, as well as the fact of combination, had been proved by other evidence. Both because of and apart from these considerations, the finding as to the lack of evidence to show a concerted plan to fix prices and eliminate competition is clearly erroneous.

Appellees have gone beyond anything sanctioned by the General Electric case in basing price control on mere process or narrow improvement patents. In that case the patents "covered completely" the superior tungsten filament incandescent lamp and it was conceded gave the patentee "a practical monopoly of the manufacture and sale of incandescent electric lamps". The so-called principal USG patents—the Utzman closed-edge patent which expired in 1929, the Haggerty starch patent which expired in 1941, and the three Roos foam patents the last of which expires in 1954—are at most narrow improvement patents containing article and process claims. The Haggerty patent did not claim a new or superior product, but merely a means to promote adhesion between the paper liners of the board and the core; the Roos patent claimed a somewhat lighter board.

Under the rule announced in the General Electric case price control must be shown to be "normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly". This means that price fixing must be proportioned to the contribution of the patent, and should be allowed, if at all, only where the patentee's invention is coextensive with the article sought to be subjected to price control. Clearly a narrow improvement patent, of which there may be many relating to a single marketable product, could not warrant control of the completed article. This Court has never held that a minor improvement in an old article of commerce will justify price control; on the contrary in Katzinger Co. v. Chi- cago Metallic Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394, 400, this Court has recently adverted to "the broad public interest in freeing our competitive economy from the trade restraints which might be imposed by price fixing agreements stemming from narrow or invalid patents". In the analogous infringement situation, the Court has consistently denied the holder of such a patent the right to recover from an infringer the entire profits derived from the sale of the article to which the patent relates. As to process patents, price control of the article made by the process is clearly not justified inasmuch as the patent does not cover the article produced. As the lower courts have repeatedly held, the patent grant may not be extended to allow the patentee to fix prices on the unpatented article produced in whole or in part by use of the patented process.

The General Electric case does not authorize the complete elimination of competition at all levels which appellees have carried into effect here. There the Court did not pass upon the reasonableness of the various regulations involved in the del credere agency plan of distribution before it. The question passed upon was whether a licensor may ever fix his licensee's prices, not whether the particular prices and methods of sale were reasonable.

Appellees' operations under the licensing arrangements, including the price bulletins, do not meet the test laid down in the General Electric case, that they be "reasonably and normally adapted to secure pecuniary reward" to USG for its patent monopoly. In active competition during the years 1926–1929 the Utzman closed-edge board and Haggerty starch board dropped in price from $30 per thousand to $20 and below. This established the actual value of the so-called patented board while it was in competition with unpatented open-edge board. After the agreements were generally signed in 1929 and competition was eliminated, the price was rapidly pushed up to a high of $28.50 in 1934. Both USG and all of its licensees, therefore, obtained a profit not due to the patentee's monopoly, but to the elimination of competition in the industry. Appellees also have eliminated No. 2 board and discontinued sale of open-edge board and seconds. Sizes have been stabilized. Packaging has been made uniform. A basing point system, with uniform billing weights, has been established. Truck and carload sizes have been regulated; deliveries to job sites prohibited; dunnage is prescribed; these, and a great many other things have been done with the object in view of eliminating competition. It is submitted they have only a remote relation, if any, to securing pecuniary reward to USG for its patent monopoly. In addition jobbers and commission men have been eliminated; the resale prices of manufacturing distributors have been controlled; both USG and the licensees have subjected themselves to policing by Board Survey; and the prices of plaster and other unpatented products sold with board have been stabilized. In so doing appellees have attempted to extend their patent grant over things not included within its terms and hence their actions are unreasonable and not sanctioned by the General Electric doctrine. Clearly the totality of all these things goes far beyond anything approved in the General Electric decision.

If the regulation of the gypsum industry disclosed in this case is sanctioned by the holding in the General Electric case, we submit that case should now be re-examined and overruled, for the reasons stated in the Line Material brief (No. 8, this Term), supported by the following considerations illustrated by this case.

A. The General Electric test is uncertain and difficult of application. It has been held not to go so far as to sanction all license conditions, even though they return pecuniary reward to the licensor. The conditions imposed must be "normally and reasonably" adapted to secure pecuniary reward for "the patentee's monopoly." Where, as here, an entire industry of erstwhile competitors has been licensed, there is no possible way in the ordinary case of determining whether the royalty, the price which the public must pay for the product, or the methods of sale are only such as are "normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly." The Court, it is submitted, should therefore abandon any attempt to assess "reasonableness" for the reasons stated in the Trenton Potteries case. The present rule is both difficult of administration and affords no certain guide for lawful conduct.

B. The facts of this case establish that the rule of the General Electric case inevitably leads to consequences of a sort condemned by the Sherman Act. Licensees have every incentive to bring others into the combination to eliminate competition and make price control effective. When patents are offered with price control the importance of the patent is of secondary consideration. And, once an industry embarks on a program of stabilizing prices there is no logical stopping point short of complete regimentation, such as has come to exist in this case. It is not enough to declare that such action goes too far; the harm will often be done before corrective action can be taken. A rule having such potentialities for harm, it is submitted, should be abolished, particularly since it rests on no positive foundation in patent law.

C. Price control further tends to defeat the purposes of the patent law. In the present case the appellees are reasonably assured of a non-competitive profit until at least 1954, when the third Roos patent expires. The principal incentive to develop new and better products has been eliminated. Moreover, this case shows that narrow and doubtful patents are given currency. Licensees agree not to contest validity; they have little incentive to do so, since that would upset the price control arrangement. In the present case it was usual until 1929 to contest the validity of industry patents, or to attempt to patent around them. Since that date there has been no patent litigation, and none of the patents in this case, with the exception of the early Utzman patent, has ever been litigated. The Court has, in the public interest, modified the long standing rule that a licensee may not question his licensor's patents in order to prevent illegal price fixing schemes from being based on invalid patents. The Court should now strike at the root of the evil and declare all patent license price control to be illegal.

The Government in an antitrust proceeding may show the fact that the patents upon which a price fixing combination rests are invalid. A price fixing combination based upon invalid patents is illegal per se. Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Elec- tric Co., 317 U. S. 173. If, as this Court has held, the public interest requires that a private litigant be permitted to show patent invalidity to relieve the public of unlawful trade restraints based on such patents, despite the private law principles of estoppel, it is clear that the Attorney General may do so in this proceeding, since he is charged by Section 4 of the Sherman Act with the duty to bring proceedings in equity to protect that public interest. The American Telephone case is not an authority to the contrary and, in fact, actually recognizes that the Government may properly contest the validity of a patent "when it is necessary in order to enable it to discharge its obligations to the public." To permit such a showing in a proceeding under Section 4 is not the equivalent of a suit for a judgment declaring the patents invalid and does not constitute the exercis of an appellate jurisdiction over the Patent Office. Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc., 279 U. S. 388.

Finally, it is submitted that within the holding of Slawson v. Grand Street R. R. Co., 107 U. S. 649, this Court should now find the article claims of the Roos "foam" patents to be invalid. Roos and USG admitted before the patents were issued that "porous" or "cellular" gypsum wall board was old in the art. The article claims of the Roos patents therefore either claim an old product or are not stated in clear and precise terms as required by the holding of this Court in the Wabash case. In either case they are invalid and it "ill becomes" an equity court to permit appellees to justify their price fixing arrangement upon such patents.

ARGUMENT

APPELLEES, BEING ERSTWHILE COMPETITORS, ARE ENGAGED IN AN UNLAWFUL CONSPIRACY TO ORGANIZE THE GYPSUM INDUSTRY AND STABILIZE PRICES BY MEANS OF COMMON PRICE-FIXING LICENSE AGREEMENTS

The Government's position is that, even if it be assumed that under United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, a patentee may in some circumstances lawfully fix a licensee's prices, this does not protect an agreement among members of an industry by which a patent licensing system with price fixing is created and maintained for the purpose of stabilizing prices and eliminating price competition. If an object of those who combined to fix prices through patent licenses is price control and not merely protection of the patentee's right to reasonable reward on his patent, the combination is unlawful. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, discussed, infra, pp. 182–184, in itself is sufficient authority for this proposition.

In the present case we submit that the evidence demonstrates that the purpose and motive of the parties in entering into the licensing plan was to eliminate price competition.[59] This is shown, almost without more, by the fact that the general licensing plan was put into effect only eleven weeks before the crucial patent was due to expire. But even if it be assumed that appellees were in part motivated by proper patent considerations, that would not protect their scheme if price stabilization was also an important object. In other words, if price fixing is an object of the plan, [59] In the court below the Government argued that when a motion to dismiss is made at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the trial court will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff to determine whether substantial evidence exists justifying the relief requested. This is the ancient rule in non-jury law cases. George A. Fuller Co. v. Brown, 15 F. 2d, 672, 675 (C. C. A. 4). It is also the rule followed in the 3rd Circuit: Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 136 F. 2d 991 (C. C. A. 3), which was decided under Rule 41 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. It was the view, it is submitted, which the framers of the Rules intended. See comment, W. D. Mitchell, before the New York Symposium (1938), Proceedings of Institutes, at pp. 336–337. The court below, after appellant had rested, signified that it intended to "weigh" the evidence and make findings of fact, in accordance with Rules 41 (b) and 52 (a) as construed in Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7) (R. 3966). Rule 41 (b) has since been amended to give the trial court an option either to decline to pass upon the defendant's motion until the close of the case or "as trier of the facts" to then "determine" them. Amendments, Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 41 (b). We submit that in this case the evidence must be found to support the Government's contentions irrespective of which view of the court's functions is taken.

and not merely a method of assuring the patentee a pecuniary reward, the scheme is unlawful.

We recognize that our contention that appellees combined for the purpose of stabilizing prices is contrary to the findings of the court below. In this Point, after discussing the legal principles to which we have briefly referred, we shall show that the findings below on this question are clearly and manifestly wrong.

A. A plan designed to control prices is unlawful even though it rests on patent license agreements

There is no question in this case but that, since 1929 at least, the appellees have fixed and maintained non-competitive prices in the sale of gypsum board (Finding 19, R. 4143). Under the guise of price control, as discussed above, they have, in fact, brought about a complete regulation of the gypsum industry. They enjoy a monopoly of the business. Apart from the question of patent justification, therefore, appellees' action in bringing about this state of affairs would unquestionably be in flagrant violation of the Sherman Act.

As this Court stated in United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 218, 221, in reaffirming the principles enunciated in United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U. S. 392:

> Thus for over forty years this Court has consistently and without deviation ad> hered to the principle that price-fixing agreements are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act and that no showing of so-called competitive abuses or evils which those agreements were designed to eliminate or alleviate may be interposed as a defense. * * *.

>
> Any combination which tampers with price structures is engaged in an unlawful activity.

Stated succinctly, "Price-fixing, reasonable or unreasonable, is 'unlawful, per se' ", United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707, 720.

Moreover, it is clear that prices are nonetheless fixed by agreement, although the actual control is delegated to one of the parties. In the present case appellees carefully point out that only USG issued price bulletins. The licensees never knew exactly what price would be fixed, though they hoped it would be high (R. 2972–2973). But here, as in United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265, at p. 276:

> Prices are fixed when they are agreed upon. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra, p. 222. The fixing of prices by one member of a group, pursuant to express delegation, acquiescence, or understanding, is just as illegal as the fixing of prices by direct, joint action.

It is further established beyond question that when competitors in an industry engage in a plan to fix prices, it is wholly immaterial that the means adopted, when viewed apart from the conspiracy, may be quite lawful. In the history of the Sherman Act many devices have been employed, but without exception the courts have brushed them aside to condemn the underlying vice of concerted action to eliminate competition. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 181. One of the clearest expressions of the point is that of Mr. Justice Holmes in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, where he said (p. 396):

> The scheme as a whole seems to us to be within reach of the law. The constituent elements, as we have stated them, are enough to give to the scheme a body and, for all that we can say, to accomplish it. Moreover, whatever we may think of them separately when we take them up as distinct charges, they are alleged sufficiently as elements of the scheme. It is suggested that the several acts charged are lawful and that intent can make no difference. But they are bound together as the parts of a single plan. The plan may make the parts unlawful.

And see Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194, 206; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, 254.

The argument upon this point, accordingly, comes down to the simple proposition that if the appellees adopted a patent-licensing scheme as a means to organize their industry and stabilize prices, the scheme is per se unlawful. That the appellees may have acted in "good faith," or upon the advice of counsel, as seems to have been the case here, in carrying out a scheme to circumvent the Sherman Act is of course no defense. For, as said in Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 49:

> The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits, or forbids, and the judgments of the courts cannot be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intention of parties, and, it may be, of some good results. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso., 116 U. S. 290; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 62.

Nor is it important that appellees may not have been familiar with the statute, though the contrary is true here, or not have "intended" to do anything in violation of its provisions. The position of this Court upon such a contention was well stated in United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 543:

> Bearing in mind that such was the nature, object and scope of the conspiracy, we regard it as altogether plain that by its necessary operation it would directly and materially impede and burden the due course of trade and commerce among the States and therefore inflict upon the public the injuries which the Anti-trust Act is designed to prevent. See Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375; 396–400; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106. And that there is no allegation of a specific intent to restrain such trade or commerce does not make against this conclusion, for, as is shown by prior decisions of this court, the conspirators must be held to have intended the necessary and direct consequences of their acts and cannot be heard to say the contrary. In other words, by purposely engaging in a conspiracy which necessarily and directly produces the result which the statute is designed to prevent, they are, in legal contemplation, chargeable with intending that result. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 243; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 370.

The foregoing propositions of law are too well settled almost to bear restatement. They are set out here only because the appellees, and the court below, seem not to have appreciated their true force and effect. Appellees argue, however, that while the law may forbid conspirators to stabilize prices throughout an industry by other devices, however lawful in and of themselves, that law does not apply where patent licenses are the means employed.

Appellees rely for authority upon two decisions of this court: Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. But a brief examination of these cases will show that they do not stand for the proposition that competitors may lawfully conspire to organize an entire industry and stabilize prices by the simple device of using common patent licenses. The question was not presented in either case. The pattern of fact in each case was merely that of a patentee granting a license to a single licensee.

Under those circumstances Chief Justice Taft in the General Electric case said that a patent holder might properly control his "licensee's" prices and methods of sale, "provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly" (Ibid. p. 490). Obviously such a holding falls far short of sanctioning a conspiracy to organize an industry and stabilize prices. But in the Bement case the express point was raised in argument that actually what the parties were doing by their licensing plan was to circumvent the Sherman Act by organizing and controlling the entire harrow industry. The comments of Mr. Justice Peckham upon this point are illuminating (pp. 94–95):

> But there is no finding by the referee that such contracts were in fact entered > into by those other parties nor that they constituted a combination of most, if not all, of the persons or corporations engaged in the business concerning which the agreements between the parties to this suit were made. If such similar agreements had been made, and if, when executed, they would have formed an illegal combination within the act of Congress, we cannot presume for the purpose of reversing this judgment, in the absence of any finding to that effect, that they were made and became effective as an illegal combination. As between these parties, we hold that the agreements A and B actually entered into were not a violation of the act. We are not called upon to express an opinion upon a state of facts not found.

In the lower courts, with the facts fully developed, the scheme to make use of the patents as a means of controlling prices had been held to be unlawful. There is no suggestion in the Bement case that these cases were wrongly decided. National Harrow Co. v. Hench et al., 83 Fed. 36 (C. C. A. 3); National Harrow Co. v. Hench et al., 76 Fed. 667 (C. C. E. D. Pa.); National Harrow Co. v. Hench et al., 84 Fed. 226 (C. C. N. D. N. Y.). And subsequently in Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, at 48, the Court recognized that the Bement decision was confined in its scope, saying that the price fixing scheme there involved had

> was a contention in that case that the contract of the National Harrow Company with Bement & Sons was part of a contract and combination with many other companies and constituted a violation of the Sherman law, but the fact was not established and the case was treated as one between the particular parties, the one granting and the other receiving a right to use a patented article with conditions suitable to protect such use and secure its benefits. * * *

The Bement and General Electric cases thus afford no direct support for appellees' position. Appellees contend, however, that a logical structure can be erected upon the General Electric doctrine which forces the conclusion that it is perfectly lawful for competitors to combine to organize an industry and stabilize prices. That is, if a patentee may license one competitor and fix his prices, it follows, they say, that he may license two or three or more. And from this it is but a short step to say that competitors may employ patent licenses for the purpose of fixing prices for an entire industry. Needless to say there is nothing in the Bement or General Electric cases or the patent law which goes so far.[59a]

[59a] See United States v. Paramount Pictures, 66 F. Supp. 323, 340 (S. D. N. Y.) where Judge A. Hand distinguished the General Electric case: "for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act."

Price control is not a positive right which a patentee may hold out to his competitors as an inducement to eliminate competition in an industry. At most, as will be discussed more fully under Point II, it is a mere protective right, sanctioned by "public policy" and enforced by the courts, "as a mode of maintaining the integrity of a patent." See dissent, MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402, at 413. A right so carefully limited may not be inflated into an aggressive means of organizing an industry and stabilizing prices, with the purpose and effect of circumventing the Sherman Act.

Moreover, appellees' contention flies squarely in the face of a basic concept of the Sherman Act. That is, many things which, if done by one person may be entirely lawful, take on a very different aspect when done by the concerted action of many. The Sherman Act, Section 1, is directed at combination and conspiracy. Assuming, therefore, that a patentee may lawfully fix the prices of a single licensee, it by no means follows, as the appellees would have it, that erstwhile competitors may conspire to blanket an entire industry under such licenses in order to organize the industry and stabilize prices.

The point has been discussed with great clarity by this Court in numerous cases where lawful devices other than patent license agreements have been employed by the parties. In United States

v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, for example, the point was made as follows (p. 357):

> It is not essential that these contracts considered singly be unlawful as in restraint of trade. So considered, they may be wholly innocent. Even acts absolutely lawful may be steps in a criminal plot. Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194, 206. But a series of such contracts, if the result of a concerted plan or plot between the defendants to thereby secure control of the sale of the independent coal in the markets of other States, and thereby suppress competition in prices between their own output and that of the independent operators, would come plainly within the terms of the statute, and as parts of the scheme or plot would be unlawful.

To the same effect see Grenada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi, 217 U. S. 433, 440; Eastern States Lumber Ass'n v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 614; Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 809.

But it is not necessary to treat the question in terms of nonpatent cases. In the case of Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, this Court was faced with an industry wide price fixing scheme based on patent license agreements. It differed from the present scheme principally in that the patent was not held by the principal manufacturer, Standard, but was transfered to one Wayman, who then licensed the industry upon a royalty basis with provisions to eliminate "seconds," control jobbers and fix prices. Defendants urged that the license they had used "followed the precedents and was based on that principle of the patent law which gives to the owner of an invention the power to grant to others its use or to withhold it, or to grant it upon such terms as he may choose to impose."

The Government's contention there, as here, was that the scheme was largely subterfuge, "illegal purpose liveried in legal forms to give color of right to illegal practices" (p. 39). The Court decided that the agreements "transcended what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it" and "accomplished a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman law" (p. 48). It is significant that the Court did not say that since a patent holder may license one manufacturer he may license all, and "upon such terms as he may choose to impose." On the contrary the Court said, (p. 49):

> Rights conferred by patents are indeed very definite and extensive, but they do not give any more than other rights an universal license against positive prohibitions. The Sherman law is a limitation of rights, rights which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained.

Appellees seek to distinguish the Standard Sanitary case. They say that in the present case USG has kept the patents in its own hands and, moreover, has been careful as respects prices to fix them according to its own wishes without consulting the licensees. But this, it is submitted, is, under the present circumstances, an irrelevant distinction. If the parties in fact have conspired to organize the industry in that manner, rather than as in the Standard Sanitary case, the apparent regularity of the transaction would be greater, but the evil accomplished would be the same. Appellees would have been ill advised indeed to have adopted no other device than the identical one in the Standard Sanitary case.

Moreover, the case of United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265, it is submitted, affords a complete answer to appellees' contentions. In that case, Masonite, like USG in this case, held certain patents on the principal industry product. It was engaged in manufacturing "hardboard", and sold it in active competition. There, as here, there was a history of patent infringement and litigation. And, in that case as in this, an arrangement was finally worked out to organize the industry and stabilize prices. The scheme agreed upon was that Masonite alone would manufacture the patented board, and it in turn would license its erstwhile competitors to sell as del credere agents at fixed prices.

Masonite, it will be noted, was even more circumspect than USG has been in its retention of control of the patents and the right to dictate the prices to be charged for the patented product. Moreover, in that case, as here, it could be argued that since a patentee may lawfully license one licensee to vend the patented product as a del credere agent, the patentee could likewise license two or three or more. Hence, it would follow, if appellee's position were correct, that Masonite could properly have licensed all its competitors to sell as del credere agents and thus entirely eliminate competition in the industry.[60]

But a unanimous court held to the contrary. The dominant concern of the patent system, it said, was that stated by Mr. Justice Story in Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 19, i. e., the promotion of the progress of science and the useful arts; reward of inventors is secondary and merely a means to that end. The Court stated (pp. 278–279):

> That must be the point of departure for decision on the facts of cases such as the

[60] The circumstance that in the General Electric case the patent license was to "make" and "vend," while in Masonite it was limited to the latter, it is submitted, is without significance. Both rights, like the right to "use," derive from the same statute and have equal sanctity. "The statutory authority to grant the exclusive right to 'use' a patented machine is not greater, indeed it is precisely the same, as the authority to grant the exclusive right to 'vend' * * *." Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 516.

> present one lest the limited patent privilege be enlarged by private agreements so as to by-pass the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, supra, pp. 456–459. Certainly if the del credere agency device were given broad approval, whole industries could be knit together so as to regulate prices and suppress competition. That would allow the patent owner, under the guise of his patent monopoly, not merely to secure a reward for his invention but to secure protection from competition which the patent law, unaided by restrictive agreements, does not afford.

And further (p. 282):

> The power of this type of combination to inflict the kind of public injury which the Sherman Act condemns renders it illegal per se. If it were sanctioned in this situation, it would permit the patentee to add to his domain at public expense by obtaining command over a competitor. He would then not only secure a reward for his invention; he would enhance the value of his own trade position by eliminating or impairing competition.

The result, it is submitted, is that a combination between erstwhile competitors to organize an industry and stabilize prices, by whatever means, is unlawful per se. Patent licenses with price control may not more than any other device be adopted concertedly by the members of an industry to eliminate competition and circumvent the Sherman Act.

B. Appellees have engaged in a conspiracy to employ patent license agreements to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices

It has been established, it is submitted, that a combination or conspiracy to organize an industry and stabilize prices is unlawful per se, notwithstanding lawful patent licenses may have been used as a means of carrying the conspiracy into effect. The scheme or plan being unlawful it is immaterial that the parts of the plan, when viewed by themselves, are lawful. It is submitted, further, that the facts of this case establish conclusively, not only that appellees have conspired to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices by means of patent license agreements, but that they have actually carried this plan into effect and completely eliminated competition in the industry.

The concept of a conspiracy or combination within the terms of the Sherman Act is relatively simple. Concerted action on the part of erstwhile competitors according to a common plan or scheme to restrain trade is the gist of the offense. It is not essential that there be any "contract" or "agreement" or "understanding"; the parties may never have met or talked with each other;[61] one conspirator may not regard himself as the "agent" or "emissary" of another; it is enough that they all act in concert in furtherance of a common purpose to restrain trade and eliminate competition.

Speaking of the conspiracy found to exist in United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, this Court said (p. 275):

> It is not clear at what precise point of time each appellee became aware of the fact that its contract was not an isolated transaction but part of a larger arrangement. But it is clear that, as the arrangement continued, each became familiar with its purpose and scope. Here, as in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 226, "It was enough that, knowing that concerted action was contemplated and invited, the distributors gave their adherence to the scheme and participated in it."

And continuing:

> The circumstances surrounding the making of the 1936 agreements and the joinder in 1937 of the two other companies leave no room for doubt that all had an awareness of the general scope and purpose of the undertaking. As this Court stated in the Interstate Circuit case (p. 227): "It is elementary that an unlawful conspiracy may be and often is formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators. * * * Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act."

The most recent statement of this Court is ound in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 28 U. S. 781, wherein the Court, through Mr. ustice Burton, said (p. 809–810):

> It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns. It is not of importance whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful. Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be in themselves wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids, they come within its prohibition. No formal agreement is necessary to constitute an unlawful conspiracy. Often crimes are a matter of inference deduced from the acts of the person accused and done in pursuance of a criminal purpose. Where the conspiracy is proved, as here, from the evidence of the action taken in concert by the parties to it, it is all the more convincing proof of an intent to exercise the power of exclusion acquired through that conspiracy. The essential combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act may be found in a course of dealing or other circumstances as well as in an exchange of words. United States v. Schrader's Son, 252 U. S. 85. Where the circumstances are such as to warrant a jury in finding that the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement, the conclusion that a conspiracy is established is justified.

1. The lower court's finding that no conspiracy has been shown in this case is clearly erroneous

Here, as in the Masonite case, the lower court made findings that no conspiracy existed on the part of the appellees. Some of these findings, to which error is assigned, relate to specific items of evidence. We have dealt with them at the appropriate point in the course of the Statement of Facts. In Finding 118, R. 4167, however, the court found broadly that "The evidence * * * fails to establish that defendants associated themselves in a plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices, as charged by the Government." It is submitted that the court erred in examining the evidence piecemeal and not in the light of the actual charges of the complaint, and that its finding is clearly erroneous.[62]

[62] The scope of the review where findings are challenged on appeal in an equity case was stated by Mr. Justice Jackson in District of Columbia v. Pace, 320 U. S. 698, as follows

The court below did not examine all of the evidence in the case upon conspiracy at any one time, but took up different parts of it at two widely separate places in its opinion. The court's reasons for so doing throw considerable light on the weight to be given to its evaluation of the evidence. Early in its opinion the court determined, contrary to the legal principles above discussed, that industry-wide or multilateral licensing, as employed by the appellees, was proper within the doctrine of the General Electric case (R. 3995–3996). That being true, a matter not conceded by appellant, the court stated that there were two questions of fact left for decision: one, whether the licenses were entered into as "bona fide" agreements and not as "sham"; the other, whether appellees carried their actual operations beyond the proper limits of their patent monopolies (R. 3999). By "sham" the court apparently meant agreements which the parties did not enter into in good faith or intend to carry out. See R. 4030.

In thus framing the first issue of fact for decision, it is submitted, the court below entirely misconceived the Government's position on the present point. It was not contended below, and it is not now, that the license agreements were

(p. 703): "* * * the whole case, both facts and law, is open for consideration in the appellate court, subject to the long-standing rule that findings of fact are treated as presumptively correct and are accepted unless clearly wrong."

"sham" in the sense meant by the court.[63] The evidence clearly shows that the appellees regarded the licenses as binding legal documents, and that they paid substantial royalties to USG. Griswold and Lenci both testified on direct examination that they understood the USG licensing plan, with price control, was legal and supported by the rulings of this court (R. 512–513, 2476). The court below seemingly did not appreciate that the Government's argument was that the scheme was illegal if an object of it was priee fixing and not merely patent protection. Even if the patent motive was a subterfuge, this would not have made the licensing agreements "sham" in the court's sense of agreements made in bad faith, since the agreements were intended to be observed.

The court below, nevertheless, made an extended review of much of the evidence in the case to determine its bearing on the issue of "sham." Each exhibit and each bit of testimony so taken up was examined to see whether it evidenced bad faith (R. 4028–4072). The court found that none of this evidence showed either (1) that the license agreements were entered into in bad faith as "sham" (Fdg. 30, R. 4148), or, (2) that they were "non-bona fide" because executed with "intent" to accomplish restraints beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly (Fdg. 57, R. 4155). Hence, in the lower court's view, there was no evidence of conspiracy.

[63] In Reply Brief, May 18, 1944, at p. 44, when answering appellee's argument that there was nothing in Blagden's testimony to indicate that he thought the patent licenses were "sham," we said: "Surely they [defense counsel] understand that it is not necessary to prove conscious 'sham,' lack of 'bona fides,' or 'cover-up,' in order to make out a conspiracy case. The parties had supposedly competent legal counsel who advised that the General Electric case would permit them to organize the industry and stabilize prices. Defense counsel, even now, argue to the same effect. Their contention that the plaintiff has failed to show 'sham,' is therefore made simply to confuse the issue."

Much later in its opinion, the court took up what it termed "additional" evidence which it said was urged by the Government as showing conspiracy (R. 4101–4117). This evidence likewise does not appear to have been reviewed by the court in the light of the Government's actual position below, i. e., that a combination among erstwhile competitors to blanket an industry under common license agreements in order to organize the industry and stabilize prices is illegal per se. The court's consideration of the evidence was clouded by its view that an unlawful conspiracy could not be shown unless it involved a showing of "sham" (R. 4105). Our position below, as here, was that a conspiracy between competitors to by-pass the Sherman Act by taking out patent licenses for the purpose of price control is illegal, irrespective of whether the licenses are "sham" or valid. And we insisted below, as we do here, that all of the evidence in the record, not merely certain "additional" evidence, is to be considered in determining that issue.

The court below disposed of a great part of the evidence of conspiracy as not showing that the licenses were "sham."[44] The small number of exhibits or "additional" evidence, reviewed by the court later in its opinion (R. 4101–4117), were taken up out of context and gave only a partial picture of the actual facts of the case on the conspiracy point, discussed at pp. 16–160 in the statement herein. It is submitted, accordingly, that the lower court's finding that the evidence does not "establish that defendants associated themselves in a plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices" (Fdg. 118, R. 4167), was based on an inadequate consideration of only part of the evidence. It is our present position, as it was below, that when all the evidence is considered, both in the shape of uncontradicted testimony and exhibits, a finding that appellees were engaged in a conspiracy to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices, and not in merely seeking to protect the USG patent monopoly, is clearly required.

[44] Among the many findings addressed to the question whether the evidence shows "sham" or lack of "bona fides" are the following: Fdgs. 29, 30, 35, 39, 40, 43, 57, R. 4148–4152, 4155. It is submitted that these findings are immaterial to the issues of the case and may be disregarded.

2. The lower court erred in holding that the declarations of the appellees were binding only upon the declarants.[*]

It is further essential to an understanding of the lower court's action in making Finding 118, as well as other findings, to consider its holding

[*] During the course of the trial the Government followed the procedure outlined in Rule 36 of F. R. C. P. and served separate requests on USG and National to admit the genuineness of certain documents, which they did. When these exhibits were offered in evidence, however, the district court ruled, upon objection, that such exhibits could only be received as binding upon the party making the admission, since the nonstipulating party had had no opportunity to cross-examine the writer upon the question of authenticity (R. 3776, 3801–3802). This ruling, it is submitted, if correct, would largely destroy the value of Rule 36 as a means of expediting trial in conspiracy cases.

In the case of United States v. Vehicular Parking Ltd., et al., 52 F. Supp. 751 (D. Del.) the court said (p. 755): "It seems to me nonstipulating defendants are bound by these admissions, until they disprove authenticity." And in United States v. National Lead Co., et al., 63 F. Supp. 513 (S. D. N. Y.), Judge Rifkind ruled in the course of trial (Tr. 421–427) to the same effect. His reasoning upon the point is persuasive: "It seems to me the balance of convenience lies here in overruling the objection especially since I take it that your objection to authenticity is not because you are really questioning the authenticity of the signature, but simply because you want an opportunity to cross-examine with respect to the verity of the declarations in the agreement. I think that that would not be accomplished by sustaining your objections, and if you want to challenge these declarations you will have to (A) either produce evidence to contradict it, or, (B) establish the absence of any conspiratorial relationship between the two parties, in which case the document would go out as far as your client is concerned." In view of this apparent conflict in interpretation with respect to the declarations of alleged co-conspirators. The case below was tried in consonance with the many holdings of this Court that the acts and declarations of a conspirator in furtherance of a conspiracy are binding upon his coconspirators.[66] The rule is perhaps best stated in the case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, where Mr. Justice Pitney said (p. 249):

> The proceedings of the international and sub-district conventions were shown by the introduction of official verbatim reports, properly authenticated. It is objected that these proceedings, especially in so far as they include the declarations and conduct of others than the answering defendants, are not admissible because the existence of a criminal or unlawful conspiracy is not made to appear by evidence aliunde. The objection is untenable. In order that the declarations and conduct of third parties may be admissible in such a case, it is necessary to show by independent evidence that there was a combination between them and defendants, but it is not necessary to

of Rule 36 an expression of the Court upon the question would, it is submitted, be in the public interest.

The trial court's ruling applied to the following exhibits, certain of which contained declarations in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy: Exs. 550, 554, 556, and 693 to 785, except exhibits 698, 715, 716, and 728. R. 6243–6246, 6248, 6492–6583. Ex. 693 was subsequently admitted. R. 3873.

[66] See, for example, Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208; International Indemnity Co. v. Lehman, 28 F. 2d 1, 4 (C. C. A. 7).

> show by independent evidence that the combination was criminal or otherwise unlawful. The element of illegality may be shown by the declarations themselves. The rule of evidence is commonly applied in criminal cases, but is of general operation; indeed, it originated in the law of partnership. It depends upon the principle that when any number of persons associate themselves together in the prosecution of a common plan or enterprise, lawful or unlawful, from the very act of association there arises a kind of partnership, each member being constituted the agent of all, so that the act or declaration of one, in furtherance of the common object, is the act of all, and is admissible as primary and original evidence against them.

Much of the evidence in the case below was introduced, as exhibits, in the form of letters, memoranda, and agreements written by the active participants in the alleged conspiracy. Speaking of evidence of this sort in United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. 964 (S. D. N. Y.), Judge Learned Hand said (p. 978):

> Ordinarily the intent, which plays so large a part in the decisions of the court in cases of this sort, must be gathered alone from the conduct of the defendants themselves; but in this case, by an unusual chance, the evidence goes much further. The officers of the Corn Products Refining Company apparently had a custom of communicating > with each other by typewritten, unsigned memoranda * * *. The documents were never intended to meet the eyes of any one but the officers themselves, and were, as it were, cinematographic photographs of their purposes at the time they were written. They have, therefore, the highest validity as evidence of intention, and, although in many instances Bedford attempted to contradict them, his contradiction only served to affect the general credibility of his testimony.

It will be noted that, within the Hitchman rule, before evidence of this type is admissible as binding upon alleged coconspirators, it must first be shown prima facie, by evidence aliunde the declarations, that an association or combination exists, but not that it is unlawful. That is, it was necessary here to show that appellees were associated together "in the prosecution of a common plan or enterprise, lawful or unlawful." With that established, the large number of exhibits in the case would then become binding "as primary and original evidence" against each conspirator.[67]

[67] That counsel for appellees fully recognized the force of the Hitchman holding is shown by the following excerpt from the proceedings (R. 3896):

"Mr. BROMLEY. * * * I am mindful of the fact that the Government need only prove a lawful arrangement, I know that, sure.

"Justice STEVENS. Prove what?

"Mr. BROMLEY. That they need only establish for their prima facie case, a lawful arrangement, then they can come along with declarations and give the illegal color or character if they want to."

The court below ruled (R. 4028), "that there is no evidence, outside the declarations, of the conspiracy charged." Hence it followed, in the lower court's view, that the many writings made by the parties in carrying out the alleged conspiracy, must be disregarded, except as they would constitute admissions in each case on the part of the declarant. The court reached this conclusion upon a review in only four pages (R. 4024–4028), of but a small part of the evidence in the case independent of the declarations.

It is submitted that in so doing the lower court erred in failing to find that a prima facie conspiracy had been made out within the rule of the Hitchman case. It largely disregarded that case. Nowhere in its short consideration of the evidence under this topic is there recognition that it is only necessary to show an informal association in furtherance of a common plan, "lawful or unlawful." On the contrary the court speaks throughout as though the evidence at this point in the proceeding must actually "prove the conspiracy charged" (R. 4026), by which the court seemingly meant that both the fact of combination and the unlawful purpose which made it a "conspiracy" must be proved. Obviously the Hitchman case announced no such rule, for if the independent evidence proved the case, it would be unnecessary to bother with the declarations at all. A ruling which would thus destroy, for all practical purposes, the value of that evidence which has the "highest validity" is manifestly erroneous.

3. Appellees have associated themselves together in furtherance of a common plan.

There is an abundance of evidence in the record apart from the declarations, it is submitted, to show that appellees have been associated together "in the prosecution of a common plan or enterprise, lawful or unlawful," within the rule of the Hitchman case. The "plan" stands out on almost every page of the record; briefly stated, it was to blanket the entire gypsum industry under common patent license agreements with price control. New patents and new licenses were added from time to time, one or another party has joined the group or been absorbed and dropped out, but the basic "plan," it is submitted, has not changed.

That such a "plan" has been in successful operation since at least 1929, as related supra pp. 102–160, can be established entirely by evidence apart from declarations. The May and November license agreements between USG and the earlier defendant were admited generally (R. 450–455). The same is true of the large batch of price bulletins (Exs. 33–39, R. 460–463) which were issued under these licenses. Moreover, the court below found, and the fact is not now questioned, that "each licensee, in the main, sold gypsum board manufactured by it at the prices and upon the terms and conditions stipulated in the bulletins" (Fdg. 19, R. 4143). Also it is not questioned that the meetings between representatives of the many licensee companies were held, or that the subject of price control was discussed (R. 2617–18).

In addition, the witness Lenci testified at great length concerning the raising and stabilization of prices (R. 2972–2973); the actual elimination of open-edge board and No. 2 board (R. 2553, 2982, 2518, 2519); the licensee meetings (R. 2534–2540, 2601–2613, 2640–2689); the policing of USG and the licensees (R. 2758–2761); the elimination of jobbers (R. 2997); the tampering with the price of plaster (R. 2992–2993); and generally concerning the progressive control of distribution which appellees have put into effect.

It is not necessary to review the testimony of Lenci; or of the other witnesses: Higgins, Tomkins, McCormack, Sensibar, and others who likewise gave testimony concerning the operation and effect of the licensing arrangement. It should be noted, simply, that this was all evidence, apart from the declarations, showing that since 1929 at least appellees have been intimately associated together in actual operation under industry wide license agreements with price control.

This state of affairs did not happen by chance; on the contrary, it is submitted, it was the fruit of the "plan" which had its inception in the conversations between Blagden and Avery in 1925, and which was actively promoted by Blagden, Avery and Griswold in the next two or three years. Both Blagden and Griswold were called as witnesses, identified various exhibits, and gave testimony, under cross-examination, not only of conferences with Avery, but that each contacted the members of the industry on one or more occasions and urged them to take out a license with USG with price control.

Blagden testified that on the Thursday preceding December 12, 1925, he met with Avery in Chicago and discussed the possibility of settling USG's infringement suit against Beaver (R. 784–786). The details of the discussion were not recalled by Blagden, but he did remember that there was discussed at this conference, (a) that Beaver would pay damages to USG, (b) that Beaver would acknowledge the validity of USG's patents, (c) that Beaver would become a licensee of USG under their board patents, and (d) that USG would have price control (R. 785–790).

After further conferences with Avery, Blagden testified that the original Beaver-USG license was signed (Ex. 1, R. 4205). This license, providing prominently for price control, became the pattern for all subsequent agreements. Thereafter Blagden testified that he had conversations with the other members of the industry, in particular: George M. Brown of Certain-teed (R. 831); Haggerty of National (R. 862); Fuller of Atlantic (R. 862); Gloyd of Texas (R. 862); Ebsary of Ebsary (R. 861); Shearer of Universal (R. 827); and "I undoubtedly talked to some others, but I can't remember" (R. 863).

Blagden testified generally as to these conversations as follows (R. 862):

> Q. Well, can you recall the subject-matter that you discussed?
>
> A. Whenever I met with these gentlemen they would ask me were we going to take out a license, or had we taken out a license with U. S. Gypsum, and I would tell them we had, and if they would ask me, "Well, what do you think about it?", I would say, "I advise you to join up."

When questioned as to what reasons he gave the members of the industry for signing the license, Blagden testified that he told each in substance the same thing (R. 831):

> Q. Now did you give Mr. Brown any further advice as to the benefits of a license agreement?
>
> A. I can't remember any.
>
> Q. Did you talk to him about stabilizing prices under a license agreement?
>
> A. I told him that, undoubtedly, if he were in with the others he would get the benefit of stabilization.
>
> Q. By "stabilization" what do you mean?
>
> A. Stable prices.

Q. And by "stable prices" do you mean uniform prices?

A. He would get the benefit of the license price, which would be the same price.

Griswold also was called as a witness, subject to cross-examination, and testified that he talked with Blagden in May 1926, concerning the USG license arrangement, and that "it would probably have a stabilizing influence on the market" (R. 513). On May 12, 1926, he wrote a letter, concerning his meeting (Ex. 104, R. 5260), in which he said: "according to the plans we have we figure that there is a possibility of us holding the price steady on wall board for the next fourteen or fifteen years which means much to the industry." On cross-examination he testified as to this (R. 701):

> Yes, I figured that if the different parties took out a license agreement with the United States Gypsum Company, and the law gave them the right to establish the price at which the licensee could sell the product, that the price on wallboard would remain fairly stationary unless it was disturbed by competition of other products.

Griswold wrote and talked with Avery on different occasions about the license arrangement. On October 15, 1926, he wrote Avery saying, in part, that a committee had been appointed which "expects to meet with all other Manufacturers of board who have not signed the License Agreement. The meeting will probably be Thursday of this coming week with the object in view of getting united action on this matter" (Ex. 123, R. 5278). On receipt of this letter Avery wrote stating his appreciation of Griswold's efforts (Ex. 124, R. 5279). On the same day Avery wrote Blagden (Ex. 191, R. 5351), quoting from Griswold's letter that "this committee expects to meet with the object in view of getting united action" and concluding with the statement, "I do not know whether you expect to be a part of this meeting, but I hope so."

Griswold's meeting was not held as scheduled (Ex. 132, R. 5285), and on January 3, 1927, he wrote Avery that: "You will remember that I started out to deliver 100 percent of the manufacturers of board that would be willing to sign up on a license arrangement * * ." In answer to a question propounded by the court concerning this statement Griswold testified (R. 663): "That as I remember it, it simply had reference to the fact that at the beginning of efforts along this line, I voluntarily stated to Mr. Avery that I thought I could deliver one hundred per cent." And further (R. 664): " * * I thought I could convince these people that they were making a mistake in not taking out a license, because they could make the board under the license as cheap, or cheaper, then they could make something that brought about a conflict."

Later Griswold testified that he had a meeting with Avery in Chicago in which he urged that the license offer be held open (R. 619). In answer to a question by the court as to what Avery said, Griswold testified: "Well, as I remember, it was that he insisted at that time, or stated that he wanted them all to come in, and of course, I had no connection with Certain-teed Products, and very seldom called upon them" (R. 620).

It is unnecessary to prolong this recital. As reviewed in detail in the statement of facts, supra, there was much additional evidence bearing on the point. For example, Holland was also active, in 1928 and 1929, in promoting the industry-wide licensing agreement. He testified: "Oh, I think I kept trying to talk these people into taking out a license" (R. 932). And what transpired at the May 1929 meetings in Chicago, at which substantially industry-wide acceptance of the original Beaver-USG licensing arrangement with price control was finally obtained, was developed by the oral testimony of Lenci (R. 2472–2476). But the Avery, Griswold, and Blagden evidence[46] alone, it is submitted, establishes overwhelmingly, apart from the declarations, that they were engaged in a common plan, lawful or unlawful. As each additional party became acquainted with the "plan" and gave his adherence to it, he became a co-conspirator against whom the declarations of all became admissible and binding as original evidence. Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208.

Blagden, Avery and Griswold, as has just been shown, were associated together in a "plan" to bring about industry-wide licensing with price control. Within the doctrine of the Hitchman case their acts and declarations in furtherance of the plan may now be examined as original evidence, binding upon them and all subsequent parties who were acquainted with the plan and gave their adherence to it. In other words, the declarations may now be used with all other evidence in the case to show the unlawful character of the "plan" or conspiracy.

The first exhibits to be considered as declarations are Blagden's letter and memorandum of December 12, 1925, sent to Avery of USG (Exs. 184, 185, R. 5337, 5338). Herein, Blagden not only states very clearly the "plan" of the conspiracy, as shown above by oral testimony, but lays bare its unlawful purpose. That is, Blagden was urging upon Avery a plan "along the lines which I have discussed with you" (Ex. 184, R. 5337), by which Avery "would be able to take a dominating position in the industry with an opportunity to control * * * prices through legitimate means of patent licenses" (Ex. 185, R. 5347). In other words, as Blagden put it several times, the opportunity was one "to organize the industry and stabilize prices" (Ex. 185, R. 5339).

To implement the plan, Blagden said that Beaver "would agree to use its best endeavors to induce manufacturers of closed-edge wallboard other than defendant to accept licenses * * *" (Ex. 185, R. 5346). And, as discussed above, Blagden not only kept his word, but endeavored to persuade Brown of Certain-teed, an open-edge manufacturer, to take out a license (R. 830–831). With general recognition of the USG patents, Blagden pointed out, USG would be able "to maintain a lawful price control and avoid the necessity of a reduction by plaintiff [USG] of current prices to meet competition."

In other words Blagden was proposing that by licensing the gypsum industry, it should be possible, putting it bluntly, to eliminate competition. Blagden's hope was not immediately realized, for the entire industry did not come together under the licenses until 1929; and, as he predicted, USG had to revise its prices sharply downward during 1926–1929 to meet competition. Supra, pp. 38–40, 53–55, 67–68. It is submitted, however, that no clearer statement could well be made of a purpose to circumvent the Sherman Act than Blagden gave in these exhibits.

On October 1, 1926, Blagden wrote to Avery that "I feel that the 'entente cordial' that has started between our companies is only a beginner and that if we play the game right it should bring big things" (Ex. 189, R. 5349–5350). Later, when questioned as to the meaning of the expression "entente cordial" in his letter, Blagden testified that he meant that "in addition to our taking out a license, that undoubtedly others would take out licenses and that would tend toward stability" (R. 864–865). It may very well be assumed that Blagden acted in "good faith," but it is incontestable from his testimony that he was promoting a plan to license the industry for the sake of "stability." And by "stability" he testified he meant "stabilizing the prices in the industry" (R. 865).

Sometime in April 1928, Griswold had a conference with Geo. M. Brown of Certain-teed about "the advisability of his taking out a license agreement" (R. 604). On April 12, 1928, Griswold wrote that Brown "stated very plainly to me that they were willing at that time to enter into a license agreement without any particular changes in it providing all of the manufacturers, including Ebsary, would enter into it and make it one hundred percent" (Ex. 141, R. 5292). Brown was not "willing to take out a license agreement with the USG on board," however, "unless it carried with it a general cleaning up of unsatisfactory conditions of all gypsum products" (Ex. 203, R. 5368).

This evidence shows that Certain-teed was fully advised of the plan to bring the industry together under the USG license. Moreover, Brown understood exactly what the purpose was, that is, to get rid of competition, and that of Ebsary in particular. Indeed, Exhibits 212 and 324 (R. 5376, 5947–5949), show that Brown knew only too well that the plan was one to give USG dominance over the industry. Therefore, when Brown went to Chicago in May 1929 in company with all his principal competitors, and signed up, the inference is irresistible that he intended to join the conspiracy "to organize the industry and stabilize prices."

The witness Black, of American, testified that he attended a meeting in October 1928 in New York at which the licensing arrangement was discussed (R. 1353). There were present: Holland of Universal, Reeb of Niagara, Haggerty and Baker of National, Walker and Henley of Certain-teed, and Ebsary. In a report to Kling (Ex. 203, R. 5367), Black said: "Mr. Ebsary is exceedingly anxious to have something done to straighten things up, and I noticed that Mr. Haggerty and Mr. Baker also seemed more anxious than they were thirty days ago."

It is evident further that the plan being discussed was that of getting everybody together under the license. "Mr. Walker, in particular, and supported by Mr. Holland, took the same position they did the day before, that everyone must be very sure before going to Chicago that they were willing to walk up and sign up a license agreement with the USG, and also to foot the bill whatever it may be" (Ex. 203, R. 5368). This exhibit shows clearly that everyone knew that the plan was one to get the whole industry under license. Moreover, it is a fair inference that they understood that only by making it unanimous could they eliminate competition and correct the price situation.

Holland's presence at this meeting (Ex. 203, R. 5367) is significant. His company, Universal, was already a licensee, enjoying the privilege of making the "superior" closed-edge board (Ex. 2, R. 4226). But his company was in receivership, and as the lower court stated in its opinion (R. 4114), his purpose was quite frankly to get everyone in under the license "in order to help his company as well as the other manufacturers out of their unfortunate financial situation due to the litigation and the price war." That is, Holland frankly wanted to eliminate all competition in the industry.

Nor was Holland merely interested in board prices; he wanted general industry prices corrected. Thus on Sept. 20, 1928, he wrote Griswold: "I am afraid that nothing can be done towards stabilization until the board matter is entirely out of the way. I believe that Mr. Avery has been very definite in a statement to that effect" (Ex. 147, R. 5298). When asked what he meant by the term "stabilization," he testified: "* * * I would assume it had reference to the hope that the downward spiral of prices in the gypsum industry would stop" (R. 909–910).

By the end of 1928 only American was still unwilling to join the combination. On January 9, 1929, Haggerty wrote Holland that the question in his mind was whether it would be "advantageous to go in" without American, particularly since, "If this price control feature was discontinued in August, as is the case in the present form of the agreement, how could we expect the cooperation of the United States Gypsum Company in anything bearing upon a discussion of price?" (Ex. 205, R. 5370).

Holland replied on January 12, 1929, that he did not think the matter of future price control was the deciding factor with American. "You will remember that Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available and we were all agreed that the fact that the Utzman patent expires next August is not a practical reason for continuing the conflict" (Ex. 206, R. 5371). Holland was called as a witness and failed to remember what the "plan" was, but he admitted that he wrote truthful letters (R. 938–939).

Holland's letter, as corroborated by his testimony, necessarily refers to the original Blagden-Avery "plan" to bring the entire gypsum industry under common license agreements in order "to organize the industry and stabilize prices." With the Utzman patent about to expire, "there were other patents available"; the essential thing was to get the industry together somehow under patent licenses with price control and end the competition.

Finally, eleven weeks before the Utzman patent was to expire, a meeting of the industry was arranged to be held in Chicago on May 21, 1929. American, however, still held out, probably for better terms on the USG infringement claim. Avery thereupon wired everyone: "Mr. Kling has sent in a contract with material changes and declares he will not attend meeting unless these changes are accepted by us Stop We can not accept them and regret that the Tuesday meeting will be futile unless other companies wish to proceed as outlined without American license" (Ex. 721, R. 6524).

What Avery meant when he suggested that the meeting might prove "futile" without American is reasonably clear. On May 17, 1929, the day before these wires were sent out, Avery wired Gloyd of Texas about the license discussions and said: "If license were generally closed it would be desirable to discuss a reasonable market price for the licensed products" (Ex. 720, R. 6524). In other words Avery recognized, flatly, that he had to have the license "generally closed" before price control could succeed, and there was not much use in going ahead unless substantially all competition was eliminated.

What took place at the May 1929 meetings has been set out in detail, supra, pp. 65–74, and need not be repeated. Avery assured Lenci that industry-wide licensing with price control was perfectly legal under the General Electric case (R. 2794). Ebsary, Niagara, and Certain-teed all signed up, National having signed on May 16 (Ex. 3, R. 4239). On the next day price bulletins were passed out. Supra, pp. 70–73. Everyone present hoped that prices would be raised and stabilized (R. 2972–2973). There was to be no more price competition, or, as it turned out, any other type of competition in the gypsum industry, supra, pp. 102–160. The initial "plan" of Blagden, Avery and Griswold, "to organize the industry and stabilize prices" had finally borne fruit.

Appellees seek to dismiss all this evidence by pointing out that various witnesses testified that they made up their minds independently (Fdg. 37, R. 4150). And, further, that they would have taken out a license even though the others had not (ibid). It is no doubt true, in a sense, that each member of the combination had to decide in his own mind what to do. But, it is submitted, to say that they each acted independently of the others is not true. Even until the last moment it was an open question whether Certain-teed and the others would go ahead without American. The decision to hold the May meetings irrespective of American was obviously the result of concerted action.

With the industry finally together under the Utzman patent, the next step was to find some other patent to continue the plan. On the last day of the May meeting, Avery proposed licensing with price control under the Roos "foam" patents (R. 2982). These, as it developed, could not be issued at once, and after many negotiations during the summer of 1929 it was arranged that Universal would sell the Haggerty starch patent to USG, and the industry would be licensed under it, with price control. Supra, pp. 80–87.

There can be no question, it is submitted, that these maneuvers were merely further steps in the original "plan" to maintain industry price control. As Avery had assured Holland, if the "plan" could not be worked out on the Utzman patent, "there were other patents available" (Ex. 206, R. 5371). Reference will be made to but one additional declaration upon the point. On July 23, 1929, the Board of Directors of National held a meeting at which Baker "stated that the United States Gypsum Company has been working on a plan to stabilize the Gypsum Industry" by granting licenses with price control on the "bubble system" patents. Under the agreements, Baker said "the prices of wall board would be fixed for the whole Industry for the term of approximately seventeen years" (Ex. 200, R. 5362).

Baker further said that "if co-operation in the Industry could be accomplished by such means, he believed it would be worth while" (Ex. 200, R. 5363). He did not say, it will be noted, that it would be important to National to have the use of the Roos patents; he was interested in "co-operation." The Board, thereupon, voted to authorize signing: "provided that the United States Gypsum Company, by virtue of the agreement with this Corporation and with other manufacturers of gypsum wall board, shall control the price of wall board sold in the United States and its possessions."

By "co-operation," it is submitted, Baker could only have meant the elimination of competition and the raising and stabilizing of prices. Lenci testified likewise that one of the reasons why Ebsary signed was to make sure that price conditions would be corrected, so that he "could make a profit" (R. 2970–2971). C. O. Brown of Certain-teed favored price control in order to have "a stabilized market" (R. 1069). Finally, the court in its opinion, states that Holland was interested in improving the "financial situation" of his company, and that of the other manufacturers as well (R. 4114).

That USG was interested in the "plan" in order to make "profits" is admitted. The lower court in Finding 74, R. 4158, said, "The primary purpose of USG in granting the licenses was [1] the settlement of litigation, [2] the collection of damages for infringement, [3] the obtaining of royalties, [4] the fixing of a profitable price on patented board and [5] the securing of the various advantages which would normally flow from the general manufacture and sale of the superior product."

By the time the industry came to negotiate the November 1929 licenses on the "starch" and "bubble" patents all the litigation had been cleared up, except with American, and that company settled on November 25, 1929. Reasons (1) and (2) therefore did not apply to these licenses. Aside from the matter of royalties which, though substantial, were deemed by Avery to be of secondary importance (Ex. 332, R. 5986), USG then had but two purposes in mind: (1) to make "profits" and (2) to obtain the "advantages" to come from "general manufacture" of a uniform product.

The licensees' purposes, it is submitted, were exactly the same. There can be no question that they wanted to make "profits", as above stated. Moreover, they likewise were ready to make a uniform product, whether "superior" or not. In fact, the lower court did not find that board made according to the Haggerty patent was a "superior" product. But the licensees' understood fully the purpose to make a uniform product and approved of it. This was shown clearly by Brown's statement concerning the benefits to come from "stabilizing the whole industry by making a uniform product and get away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had." (Ex. 226, R. 5390).

II

THE FIXING OF PRICES FOR A BASIC UNPATENTED ARTICLE BECAUSE OF NARROW IMPROVEMENT OR PROCESS PATENTS WOULD BE AN UNWARRANTED EXTENSION OF THE DOCTRINE OF UNITED STATES v. GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

The burden of proof.—We do not understand that appellees question that they are parties to a combination which, apart from rights conferred by the patent law, would violate the Sherman Act. Rather, their position is that the combination is sanctified by rights conferred by the patent law as construed in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476.

The Government has, however, made out a prima facie case when it has shown (1) that appellees are engaged in a combination or conspiracy, (2) to restrain trade in gypsum board and related products by fixing prices and controlling distribution. Such a combination is not only a violation of the Sherman Act, but it has long been held to be illegal per se. (See Point I.) Accordingly, insofar as the rights conferred upon appellees by the patent laws may afford them a justification for their actions, it is for them to allege and carry the burden of establishing that they come within such protection. In the court below, the Government urged, and we urge here, that appellees have the burden of establishing: (a) that they have valid patents of a type to justify price control; (b) that the gypsum board made and sold by appellees has been, in fact, covered by such patents; and (c) that the price control exercised by appellees went no further than strictly necessary for the protection of their patents.

The court below, in its opinion, held that it was for appellant to carry the burden on these issues (R. 4004, 4049). In so doing, it is submitted, the court not only misconceived the true effect of the well-settled doctrine that price fixing among competitors is illegal per se (United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U. S. 392, and related cases), but misread Rule 8 (c), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which, for reasons of relative convenience and orderly presentation, provides in considerable detail that all defenses of the type urged by appellees in this case must be pleaded affirmatively. There are no cases squarely in point under Rule 8 (c). However, in United States v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800

(E. D. Pa.), which presented issues similar to those in this case, the court said (p. 803):

> The next branch of the defense which presents itself for analysis and discussion is that based upon the patent rights of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The plea is, in legal effect and in practical acknowledgement, one in confession and avoidance, for there is, as already stated, a substantial (although not formal) admission that, with this patent ownership out of the case, plaintiff should have the relief prayed.

Compare National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 83 Fed. 36, 38 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 172, 190 (C. C. D. Md.); United States v. Eastman Kodak Company, 226 Fed. 62 (W. D. N. Y.); Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 237–239; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

Gypsum board and gypsum products are articles of commerce to be sold in a free market, except as appellees can show that they hold patents which carve out an exception in their favor. "Since patents are privileges restrictive of a free economy, the rights which Congress has attached to them must be strictly construed so as not to derogate from the general law beyond the necessary requirements of the patent statute." United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, at 280.

It will be appreciated that this position of the court below must have had an important bearing on its treatment and evaluation of the evidence. Some adverse findings might very well have been favorable to appellant had the burden of patent justification been put properly on the appellees. However, irrespective of where the burden is placed, it is submitted that the appellees have no justification under the General Electric case or the patent laws for their actions in this case.

A. The USG patents are not basic patents representing fundamental developments

The General Electric case was deemed by the court to be concerned with basic patents representing fundamental developments. Whatever justification there may be for permitting price fixing with respect to such patents does not extend to patents such as are here involved.

The patents "upon which the main board license agreements in the instant case were founded" (Fdg. 24, R. 4145), were five in number, to wit, the Utzman "closed-edge" patent (No. 1,034,746); the Haggerty "starch" patent (No. 1,500,452); and the three Roos "foam" or "bubble" patents (Nos. 2,017,022; 2,079,338, and 2,080,009). Each of these patents is set out as an exhibit to the complaint (R. 35, 64, 100, 104, 109). These are the patents which, in the view of the court below, justified appellees in their price control and regimentation of the gypsum industry.[69]

The court below found that "no substantial distinction can properly be drawn between the instant case and the General Electric case in respect of the importance of the patented improvements within the respective industries, or, in respect of the nature of the patents which underlie the license agreements in the two cases" (Fdg. 25, R. 4146)." And in Finding 24 (R. 4145), the court found that "these patents covered fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry." It is submitted that both of these are unwarranted.

The General Electric case was tried upon certain broad stipulations which made it unnecessary for the court to examine in detail the claims of the three patents involved. It was stipulated that the validity of the patents involved had been tested in litigation (R. 89, No. 113, 1926 Term, hereinafter referred to as GE. R. ——), and the Government raised no issue either as to validity or scope (GE. R. 90). Moreover, not only was it assumed in the General Electric case that the lamps manufactured by the parties were "covered" by the patents, but it was stipulated (GE. R. 104) that General Electric had acquired "a practical monopoly of the manufacture and sale of incandescent electric lamps."

[69] The court below also found that licenses "to make, use, and sell board having a metallized surface" were granted on the Roos "metallized board" patent (No. 1,914,345) which covered "the use of foil as a thermal insulating element in board" (Fdg. 16, R. 4141), and that licenses were taken out on the Roos "perforated lath" patent (No. 1,938,354) "covering a fire resistant plasterboard" made by having "holes of given size punched through it at designated intervals." (Fdg. 17, R. 4142). Neither of these patents was introduced in evidence or brought before the court as exhibits to the complaint. These patents are obviously even less basic than the "closed-edge," "starch," and "foam" patents, and the argument in the text clearly would apply to them as well.

[70] Although a part of the findings, this comparison of cases is obviously not a finding of fact but a legal conclusion. The facts as to the General Electric patents were not, of course, in the record in this case.

Supplementing this stipulation, the Government in its brief at page 7, made the further concession that:

> * * * the General Electric Company does control through its patents on tungsten lamps and processes of manufacturing such lamps 86 percent, and can control 100 per cent of the electric-lamp business of the United States.

On this showing, after only a cursory description of the patents taken from the stipulated facts, Chief Justice Taft said: "These three patents cover completely the making of the modern electric lights with the tungsten filaments, and secure to the Electric Company the monopoly of their making, using and vending." United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 481.[71] If the five USG patents are to be compared with those in the General Electric case, as the court below did in Finding 25, they must be shown to have given USG virtual dominance of the gypsum board industry. An examination of the USG patents will show that they do not possess any such characteristics: here involved "covered fundamental developments" (R. 3981) (Fdg. 24, R. 4145). We think the court erred with respect to both. This Court's opinion in the General Electric case demonstrates that it regarded the tungsten filament patent as fundamental to the "making of the modern electric lights." 272 U. S. at 481. Indeed in their brief below (p. 25), appellees cited with approval General Electric Co. v. Laco-Philips Co., 233 Fed. 96 at 105–6 (C. C. A. 2), where the court, in holding the Just and Hanaman patent valid, gave its approval to Judge Mayer's glowing description of the tungsten lamp as follows:

[71] The court below regarded the tungsten filament lamp patents in the General Electric case as "not basic" but as "merely improvements" (R. 3980), but held that the patents

"I think the invention here in suit is of great merit, entitled to firm support, and second only to Edison's. Edison found a dim pathway and transformed it into an illuminated road. Just & Hanaman have broadened that road into a boulevard, alive with blazing lights. It is not hyperbole to say that the tungsten lamp has made millions happier for its greater comfort and its better cheer * * *."

Appellees also cited General Electric Co. v. Independent Lamp & Wire Co., Inc., 267 Fed. 824 (D. N. J.), where similar language was used in describing the ductile tungsten filament claimed by Coolidge. Although the tungsten filament patents were in a sense improvements of the original light bulb, they actually created a new and different product with which the former product could not compete. This was obviously not the situation in the instant case, since there is no such fundamental difference between open-edge and closed-edge gypsum board; the record shows that they did compete until the combination of appellees effectively stifled the competition. See pp. 38–40, 53–55, 67–68, supra.

1. The Utzman patent.—During the years 1926–1929, the Utzman "closed-edge" patent was the only principal patent upon which the court found that the parties based price control, and accordingly it may appropriately be examined alone. The court below found that the Utzman "closed-edge" board was a "superior product" (Fdg. 74, R. 4158).

This can be conceded, and still it is unquestionably true that Utzman contributed by his invention only a modest improvement in the method of making plasterboard. When his patent was issued in 1912, wallboard was already old in the art. Judge Evans, referring to the Utzman patent, said in Bestwall Mfg. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co., 270 Fed. 542 (C. C. A. 7), that "the covering for the edges of the gypsum was the heart of the discovery" (p. 545), and also said (p. 544); "We may not, and in fact do not, agree with counsel for patentee that this was a 'broad novelty,' nor with its expert witness that this was a 'daring conception'."

That the Utzman patent did not make a fundamental change in product appears from the fact that until the remaining manufacturers of open-edge board became licensees in 1929 unpatented open-edge board was sold in active competition with the patented closed-edge board, despite repeated and drastic reductions in the price of closed-edge board and the introduction of still lower priced "fighting" brands of closed-edge board (supra, pp. 38–40, 53–55, 67–68). The open-edge board did not disappear from the Eastern market until 1929 when those who were manufacturing it became licensees under the Utzman patent. It may also be observed that open-edge board continued to be sold in the Pacific Coast states in competition with closed-edge board after the Utzman patent expired (R. 3508, 3531–33, 3546).

It would seem clear that the Utzman patent did not, contrary to the lower court's finding (Fdg. 24, R. 4145), cover "fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry" of equal significance with the stipulated importance of the General Electric patents. Even if true, the point would be of minor importance in this case, since industry-wide price fixing founded on the Utzman patent did not get under way until May 22, 1929, a matter of only eleven weeks before the patent expired. USG and its licensees were, of course, aware of this when the license agreements were signed, and obviously could not have regarded this patent as a fundamental basis for the price-fixing plan if they were thinking of the patent value alone. On and after August 6, 1929, appellees could make the "superior product" as they saw fit without benefit of license.

2. The "starch" patent.—From November 1929 until sometime in 1935 when the first Roos "foam" patent issued, the only principal patent upon which the appellees could base their license agreements, as the court below found (Fdg. 24, R. 4145), was the Haggerty "starch" patent. The patent was acquired by USG from Universal so as to furnish a basis for maintaining the licensing system and price fixing after the Utzman patent expired. Numerous other patents were included in the November agreements,[72] but these are not in evidence. And, moreover, all such patents had already been licensed to the appellees who had signed the May agreements. In addition to the "starch" patents, therefore, only the Roos "foam" or "bubble" and the Bayer applications were new to the November licenses.

It was on the basis of the Haggerty patent that the appellees really organized the gypsum industry and stabilized prices. Contrary to the lower court's findings, it is submitted that the Haggerty patent unquestionably did not represent a "fundamental development in the gypsum board manufacturing industry" (Fdg. 24, R. 4145); nor can it be said that "no substantial distinction" may be drawn between Haggerty and the General Electric patents as they were stipulated to be in that case. The Haggerty patent represented, at [72] It will be recalled that C. O. Brown wrote on August 9, 1929, that the reason for this was that: "The Attorneys feel that such a contract would be exceptionally strong and price control could be maintained for the life of the Contract without difficulty" (Ex. 231, R. 5401).

most, but a narrow and unimportant improvement in the art of making wall board.

There is no suggestion in the record that Haggerty created a new and different product. The claims of his patent read upon the old product long known to the trade to which a quantity of "cooked starch" had been added "to insure secure adhesion" of the paper covering or liners to the gypsum core (Claim 1, R. 68). The validity or scope of his patent has never been litigated; it was not considered of much consequence in the industry until the summer of 1929, when some vehicle had to be found upon which to base price control. Until that time companies not using the starch device had been able without difficulty to compete with the company owning the starch patent (Ex. 231, R. 5403). In fact that company went into receivership during this period despite sole ownership of the starch patent and its license under the Utzman patent.

The district court did not find that the Haggerty patent made a "superior" product. It found merely that Haggerty "solved the 'peeler' trouble in the gypsum board industry and made possible modern high speed production of gypsum board" (Fdgs. 12, 24; R. 4138, 4145). By the "peeler" problem the court had reference to the fact that on occasion, particularly when board was dried too rapidly, the paper liners might come loose in places from the gypsum core, causing blisters or "peelers." Since "peelers" ordinarily could be discovered at the plant by proper inspection (R. 1414), the most that Haggerty could have contributed was some saving in time and expense in the manufacture of board.[73]

3. The "foam" or "bubble" patents.—In 1935 the first of the Roos "foam" or "bubble" patents was issued, and in 1937, the second and third (Exs. 8, 9, and 10 attached to complaint, R. 100, 104, 109). Upon the expiration of the Haggerty patent on July 8, 1941, these were the only principal patents upon which the license agreements rested (Fdg. 24, R. 4145). These patents, like the Utzman and Haggerty patents, were found by the court below to be "products patents upon a building material called * * * wallboard"; each reading "upon the entire product"; and covering "fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry" (Fdg. 24, R. 4145).

The lower court's finding that the three Roos "foam" patents are patents reading upon a material "called wallboard" is manifesty erroneous.

[73] In fact there is no evidence in the record that the Haggerty patent "solved" anything. The record shows that some witnesses testified that certain of the appellees used "starch" in the manufacture of board, but none testified to the use of starch according to Haggerty (C. O. Brown, R. 1241-1242; Whittemore, R. 1413; Chism, R. 3482). In fact Chism testified that Texas took out its license under the Utzman closed edge patent in 1927 in order to reduce manufacturing costs "due to loss from bad board, what we called 'peelers,' and broken edges" (R 3479).

Brief examination of the claims of the three patents will show that the first and second patents have to do with an intermediate cellular or porous cementitious material described as being useful in the manufacture of many different types of building materials (R. 100, 104). Only the third Roos patent (No. 2,080,009) contains claims reading upon wallboard (R. 109).

It is submitted that the Roos "foam" patents, like the several patents above discussed, are merely narrow improvement patents. The basic or fundamental idea of making a lighter board by the introduction of sawdust or fiber, or of chemicals to produce air cells, as appears from the Roos specifications (R. 105), was old in the art. Roos did not invent a basically new product (and there is no evidence that any board was made according to his patent);[74] at most he contributed a new process to make an old product."[75] The court's finding that no substantial distinction can be drawn between the Roos "foam" patents and the patents in the General Electric case is plainly in error.

[74] The Government's position was and is that once a price-fixing conspiracy is proved, the burden is on the defendant to prove a patent justification, which includes proof that the patents were used. See pp. 218–221, supra. The court below apparently assumed that board was made according to the patents, on the theory that the burden was on the Government to prove the contrary (R. 4011).

[75] Both the scope and the validity of these patents is doubtful. See pp. 288–290, infra.

B. Narrow improvement and process patents afford no basis for price control

At the heart of the argument on this point is the question: under what circumstances and for what reasons may a patent holder license another and control the prices and terms of sale at which his licensee may sell the patented article. In United States v. General Electric, 272 U. S. 476, 490, Chief Justice Taft stated the rule to be that the licensor may limit his licensee's method of sale and the price: "provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly." This is the test, as above noted, which appellees must satisfy as a matter of affirmative defense.

It is beyond the scope of this point to discuss the basis for the Court's holding. It will be noted, however, that the Court did not say that the licensor has an unqualified right to require his licensee to sell at such prices and on such terms as he may see fit to impose. The right to fix a licensee's prices, thus, is not treated as part of the patent grant, but as a mere subsidiary right fashioned by contract and sanctioned by the Court as a protection to the licensor in the enjoyment of his patent monopoly.

In Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 48, the Court had employed substantially the same test as that announced by Chief Justice Taft in the General Electric case.

There, in striking down industry-wide price-fixing licenses, the Court said: "The agreements clearly, therefore, transcended what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it. They passed to the purpose and accomplished a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman law." [78]

Two questions are thus presented in any case when a court is considering whether a licensor has pushed his price fixing too far: the first, whether the scope and importance of the patent is such as to justify any price control, will now be considered; the second, whether the licensor and his licensees have carried their activities beyond what is normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward to the patentee for his patent monopoly, will be discussed in the next Point.

Since price control is a protective measure, it must be proportioned to the scope and character of the licensor's patents. Many patents do not admit of any degree of price control under the doctrine announced by the Court in the General Electric case. It is submitted that the Roos "foam" patents and the Haggerty "starch" patents, which as shown above are merely narrow improvement or process patents, fall in this class. And, a fortiori, as will be discussed later, they do not justify the complete regimentation of the gypsum industry carried out in this case. In so doing, the appellees went beyond what was necessary for the "protection" of their patents.

[78] In the recent case of MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402, it was stated in the dissent (p. 413) that the right of a licensor to fix his licensee's pricing was "a mode of maintaining the integrity of a patent and as such is sanctioned by public policy." It is considered that this language is wholly consistent with the test laid down in the Standard Sanitary and General Electric cases.

To illustrate, in the Standard Sanitary case the patent involved covered a "dredger"; that is, a machine, tool, or appliance used to distribute enamelling powder evenly when making bathtubs. By its use, as the parties contended, it was possible to make a "superior" bathtub. But, since the patent covered merely the "dredger" and not the bathtub, the Government contended that price control based on the finished product was not for the protection of the patentee's monopoly, but to protect his business of making bathtubs. The lower court put its decision in part upon the ground that a mere tool or appliance patent would not justify price control of the unpatented finished product."[11] In this Court the combination [11] The opinion of the three-judge circuit court, in concluding its discussion of this subject, stated: "The fact that Wayman had a patent on something else, even though it was a tool used in one step of the making of the ware, gives neither him nor his licensees the right to restrain interstate trade in the ware. The ownership of a patent for a tool by which old, well-known, and unpatented articles of general use can be more cheaply made gives no right to combine the makers and dealers in the unpatented articles in an agreement to make the public pay more for it." United States v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 172, 192 (C. C. D. Md).

was found to be illegal without, as the Court said (p. 49), "entering into the consideration of the distinction of rights for which the Government contends between a patented article and a patented tool used in the manufacture of an unpatented article."

A mere process patent, it is submitted, likewise does not justify price control of the finished product. The patent grant in the case of a process patent gives the patentee a right to exclude others from using the patented process; the products, whatever they may be, are outside the patent grant. Price control of the finished product made by a licensee from his own materials, with his own labor and according to his own designs, and sold to the public by his own efforts, would not afford protection to the patentee for his "patent monopoly," but would be permitting him illegally to extend his control over the unpatented articles.

The question whether a licensor may base price control on a process patent, like the question concerning tool or appliance patents, has not been passed upon by this Court. It is submitted, however, that the situation in each case does not differ in principle from those in which this Court has refused to permit a patentee to use his patent to suppress competition in an unpatented article. For the patent on the process is, by its nature, not a burden on the article produced by the process.

The various circuit courts of appeals to which the question has been presented have, with a single exception,[78] denied the holder of a tool or process patent the right to fix the price at which his licensee may sell the unpatented product. American Equipment Co. v. Tuthill Bldg. Material Corp., 69 F. 2d 406, 409 (C. C. A. 7); Barber-Colman Co. v. National Tool Co., 136 F. 2d 339 (C. C. A. 6); Cummer-Graham Co. v. Straight Side Basket Corp., 142 F. 2d 646 (C. C. A. 5); Sylvania Industrial Corp. v. Visking Corp., 132 F. 2d 947, 955 (C. C. A. 4).

The rationale of the General Electric case leads to no different conclusion. Rather it supplies a second reason upon which to deny price control in the case of a process patent. Undoubtedly the holder of such a patent, particularly if he used it in his own business, would gain "pecuniary reward" if he could control his licensee's prices on the unpatented finished product. But it could hardly be said that such control was "normally and reasonably adapted" merely to secure reward for his patent monopoly. Rather, he would be going beyond anything "necessary to protect" the use of his patent and gaining an advantage by contract due to the elimination of competition in the unpatented article.

[78] The Second Circuit ruled to the contrary in Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket Co., 82 F. 2d 245 (C. C. A. 2), without adverting to the nature of the patent, in reliance upon Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and the General Electric case. But in neither of these cases was the Court speaking of tool or process patents. The Second Circuit's decision has not only been expressly disapproved by the Fifth and Sixth Circuits in the Barber-Colman and Cummer-Graham cases, cited in the text, but as the latter case (which involved the same company) indicates, has been abandoned as protective authority by the successful party. And the Second Circuit itself, after referring to a conflicting decision and the present "tendency" of this Court, has stated that at the present time "the whole subject is plainly in flux." United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F. 2d 416, 438.

Another reason for differentiating between patents on an article itself and minor improvement and process patents lies in the possibility of multiple restraints if the latter provided a sufficient basis for price fixing. There may be a number of such patents relating to a single article. Can the owner of each patent fix prices on the product? To take a hypothetical case which has some resemblance to the case at bar, could the person who owned a patent on the method of putting sides on a freight car, the person who owned a patent on the bolts which hold the other parts of the car together, or the person who owned the patent on an improved but not indispensable type of insulating material fix the sale price for manufacturers of the entire car? And if each could, and if they had not gotten together by pooling their patents, which would prevail? Clearly the confusion which would result if such patents supported the price fixing on a finished product is as obvious as is the fact that allowing such control of the finished product would permit a reward out of all proportion to the magnitude of the invention.

Both the Haggerty "starch" patent and the Roos "foam" patents contain a number of process claims (R. 68, 103, 108, 113). For example, Haggerty, in claim 4, claimed "the method of making a paper lined gypsum board which consists in intimately mixing cooked starch with dry gypsum and then rolling into shape on a paper liner" (R. 68). Roos, in patent No. 2,080,009, claim 7, claims "The process of making wallboard which comprises mixing a dense foam with a starch paste to expand the latter and form cells therein, adding the mixture to a slurry of calcined gypsum, placing the mass between sheet liners and drying the same" (R. 114). It is submitted that, on the authorities and principles above discussed, these and the other method or process claims in the Roos and Haggerty patents afford no justification whatever for the price control on wallboard exercised in this case.

Both patents, however, also contain article claims. Claim 10 of the Roos "foam" patent, No. 2,080,009, which is fairly typical of the article claims in that patent, reads as follows: "10. A plaster board having a porous body comprising a hardened cementitious material enclosing a plurality of voids encased in tough pliable films" (R. 114).

But the discussion of prior art in the specifications (R. 110)[79] shows clearly that "porous or cellular" gypsum is old. Haggerty in 1922 described the making of a "porous" wallboard (R. 65). When the Roos patents were in interference with Rice, moreover, it was conceded by Roos that "cellular" gypsum was old in the art, and the court so held.[80] It is thus clear that both

[79] The specifications admit that (R. 110): "certain chemicals or minerals have sometimes been added to the dry calcined gypsum which will upon the addition of water evolve a gas causing the mixture to puff out or expand in volume and upon the setting of the gypsum will form a porous or cellular body * * *."

[80] See Bayer v. Rice, et al., 75 F. 2d 238 (App. D. C.), where the court said (p. 240):

"The evidence discloses that partition tile made from gypsum, as well as wallboard made from gypsum, had been used commercially for years prior to the making of this invention. Of course, concrete blocks were still older. The evidence also discloses that cellular gypsum and cellular cement were known to the art. The patent to Sanford, No. 230151, dated July 20, 1880, covers a cellular gypsum product wherein the cellular structure is produced by means of a chemical reaction occurring in situ. The Luttgen patent, No. 845365, February 26, 1907, discloses a process of making a cementitious product filled with air spaces * * *."

In the brief filed on behalf of Roos and United States Gypsum Company in the above proceeding on October 24, 1934, No. 6141, the point was insisted upon, over and over again throughout the brief, that (p. 9): "cellular cement as a product—a building material—was old in the art at the time that Roos and Rice and Bayer separately made their inventions." It was explicitly stated (p. 86):

"So when Roos entered the field by making cellular cement products by his specific process, the ensuing product—namely, the cellular cement or the cellular gypsum—was well

Roos and Haggerty are at most narrow improvement patents. Wallboard is old. Many inventors, particularly Utzman with his closed-edge patent, have contributed to the making of the board being sold today. Neither Roos nor Haggerty could say when this suit was brought that commercial gypsum board was in any large part the result of their inventive genius.

It was held in the General Electric case, as discussed above, that a licensor may control his licensee's prices provided the conditions of sale are "normally and reasonably" adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the "patentee's monopoly." No sanction is given to obtain reward for anything but the patentee's monopoly. The control of prices on products not embraced within the patentee's monopoly or on basic products on which the patentee is responsible for a nonbasic improvement would not be reasonably adapted to the securing of a reward on the patent. In other words, price control, to be permitted at all, must be carefully proportioned to the patentee's invention, to his actual contribution to the art sought to be controlled. He is entitled to "pecuniary reward" for nothing else. This would appear to be a basis for this Court's refer-known in the art and, consequently, there was nothing new or novel about such lightweight cellular products made in the form of gypsum partition tile and gypsum wallboard." [Italics in original.]

ence in Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394, 400, to "the broad public interest in freeing our competitive economy from the trade restraints which might be imposed by price-fixing agreements stemming from narrow or invalid patents."

Upon this analysis it is submitted that Haggerty contributed nothing which would entitle him, as a "reward," to control the entire wallboard industry as was done in this case. And the same can be said for Roos. The one contributed, at most, a saving in expense of manufacture in making it possible to dry the board more rapidly without producing "peelers" (Fdg. 24, R. 4145); the other claimed a somewhat lighter board (R. 2532) which might be less costly to make and ship. (See, supra, pp. 73–76.) It needs no argument to point out that these inventions are not to be compared in importance with the inventions before this Court in the General Electric case, which were deemed to be basic and fundamental to the creation of the tungsten filament lamp.

Such being the case, to what, if any, extent should Haggerty or Roos be permitted to control the price of wallboard? There are no express holdings on the point in this Court, and hence it will be necessary to resort to analogy. In Garretson v. Clark, 111 U. S. 120, where the holder of a patent "for an improvement in the construction of mop-heads" sued an infringer to recover as damages the entire profits which the infringers had made in the sale of the completed mop, the Court said, in rejecting this measure of recovery (p. 121):

> When a patent is for an improvement, and not for an entirely new machine or contrivance, the patentee must show in what particulars his improvement has added to the usefulness of the machine or contrivance. He must separate its results distinctly from those of the other parts, so that the benefits derived from it may be distinctly seen and appreciated.

In the earlier case of Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wall. 620, the patent was upon a process for annealing cast-iron railroad car wheels. The Court, in denying the patent holder damages based upon the whole profit made by the infringer, pointed out that many inventors may have held patents which contributed to the value of the finished product. To allow each a recovery of the full profits upon sale of the article would mean that "an infringer might be mulcted in several times the profits he had made from the whole manufacture" (p. 651). See also, Seymour v. McCormick, 16 How. 480, 487.

It would seem beyond dispute that neither Haggerty nor Roos could be said to have contributed by their inventions more than a fractional value to the gypsum board sold by appellees. It was Utzman who made the "superior" closed-edge board, and inventors before him had contributed the basic patents on board. The above cases establish that in a suit for infringement Haggerty or Roos could recover no more than the value which their inventions contributed to the finished product.

It is submitted that, for similar reasons, neither the Haggerty nor Roos inventions were of an order to justify price control of the commercial product, wallboard. To permit price control in such case would be to give the patentee a "pecuniary reward" not only for his narrow patent improvement, but a much larger reward from the sale of wallboard itself in a noncompetitive market. He would gain a business profit, not merely a reward for his invention. Here, as in the case of the tool, appliance, or process patents, discussed above, to sanction price control would be to permit the patentee to extend his patent monopoly far beyond the reward due to his invention. The facts of this case disclose that the holder of a narrow improvement patent, when armed with the right to offer price control to his competitors, can exert enormous power to eliminate competition and regiment an industry. Such a power to nullify the economic policy declared by Congress in the Sherman Act should be conferred sparingly, if at all.

APPELLEES HAVE CARRIED PRICE CONTROL AND INDUSTRY REGULATION BEYOND ANYTHING REASONABLY ADAPTED MERELY TO SECURE PECUNIARY REWARD TO USG FOR ITS PATENT MONOPOLY

The evidence is undisputed that appellees have in fact organized the gypsum industry and stabilized prices. They have discontinued the sale of all board but that allegedly manufactured under USG's patents; they have discontinued the sale of No. 2 board and seconds for which there had been a substantial market; they have standardized board sizes; they have adopted a uniform method of packaging; they have adopted a uniform delivered price system; they have adopted arbitrary billing weights; they have prescribed minimum car and mixed car weights; they have agreed upon uniform switching and carriage charges; they have regulated the amount of dunnage; they have prescribed minimum truck load sizes; they have agreed upon the areas in which truck deliveries can be made; they have prohibited truck deliveries to the job-site; they have agreed to minimum pick-ups at mills; they have agreed not to rent the warehouses or trucks of a dealer; they have agreed upon the classes of customers and upon the particular persons in certain of those classes to whom they will sell; they have discriminated between customers within the same general class; they have agreed upon the manner in which price quotations shall be made; they have agreed upon the terms of discount and the medium of payment; they have prohibited the employment of commission salesmen and sales upon consignment; they have proscribed certain types of advertising; and they have tampered with the price at which unpatented products may be sold.

Nothing in the General Electric case requires the Court to sustain any such system of private regimentation.

The General Electric case does not hold that conditions on the method and price of sale comparable to those imposed by General Electric on Westinghouse are legal under all circumstances. This is implicit in the critical language of the opinion. Thus the Court said that a patentee may grant a license to make, use and vend, "upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure" (p. 489). And again (p. 490):

> If the patentee goes further, and licenses the selling of the articles, may he limit the selling by limiting the method of sale and the price? We think he may do so, provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly.

The notion that the General Electric case holds that there is inherent in the patent grant an unrestricted right to fix the methods of sale and minimum prices must rest upon the assumption that the exercise of this right will never result in an enlargement of the patent grant or that any enlargement which may result is sanctioned. Both of these assumptions are negatived by the Masonite case. The del credere agency agreements there involved were regarded as "license[s] to vend" a patented product (p. 277). Each of the agreements fixed the minimum price at which the agent might vend the product. Thus as here and as in the General Electric case, the question was the legality of conditions imposed on the right to vend. The Masonite agreements were held to result in "an enlargement of the limited patent privilege" (p. 279) and were condemned for that reason. In reaching this conclusion the Court said (p. 280):

> In the General Electric case, the Court thought that the purpose and effect of the marketing plan was to secure to the patentee only a reward for his invention. We cannot agree that this is true here.

It is not sufficient, therefore, merely to compare the provisions of the license agreements and bulletins in the General Electric case with those in the present case. The purpose for which the restraints were imposed, their extent and the factual context in which they operate are decisive factors.

It was assumed in the General Electric case that the patents of General Electric gave it the power to "control 100 percent of the electric-lamp business of the United States" (supra, p. 223). And it was in this factual context that Chief Justice Taft said that when a patentee licenses another "It would seem entirely reasonable that he should say to the licensee, 'Yes, you may make and sell articles under my patent, but not so as to destroy the profit that I wish to obtain by making them and selling them myself' " (p. 490). In other words, the Court regarded price-fixing as a purely protective device to safeguard a patentee in the enjoyment of his patent monopoly.

The district court was of the view that the General Electric case sustained the validity of license agreements the terms and conditions of which were not materially different from those in the present case, and that each and all of appellees' activities under the licensing arrangement, including price control, are "reasonably and normally adapted to secure to USG the pecuniary reward for its patents and do not go beyond the limits of the monopoly granted by the patent laws" (Fdg. 28, R. 4148).

As to the first of these conclusions, it is clear that this Court's opinion in the General Electric case did not consider restrictions of the various types involved here. It is true that examination of the record in General Electric will disclose that the pricing regulations there established by contract were detailed and complicated, and controlled many aspects of the licensee's business—though not, in our opinion, to the extent involved here.[81] But a line-by-line comparison of USG's price bulletins with the General Electric agreement is unnecessary.[82] For in the General Electric case the Government stood on the basic proposition that no price control at all should be permited, and the question principally debated was whether the del credere agency plan involved a sale with unlawful resale price control. There was no assignment of error and no discussion in the briefs or in the Court's opinion as to whether each or any of the many price regulations employed were "reasonably adapted" to secure proper reward for the General Electric patents. The Court was thus not called upon to examine these regulations or to determine their validity. The question now presented, therefore, only lurked in the record of that case, and the decision is not, under established principles, to be regarded as a precedent as to such matters. Webster v. Fall, 266 U. S. 507, 511; KVOS, Inc. v. Associated Press, 299 U. S. 269, 279.

[82] We do not, of course, concede that the conditions in the General Electric-Westinghouse license went no further than normally and reasonably necessary to secure a pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly. Since crucial facts in the General Electric case and the present case differ, it is not now necessary to discuss this question.

A brief review of what appellees have done under their licenses will show that they have gone far beyond what is necessary to secure a reasonable pecuniary reward for their patents.

Price.—The facts of the present case afford dramatic illustration of the improper use of price control. It is not disputed that during the years 1927, 1928 and 1929 the price of Sheetrock manufactured by USG had dropped from $30 to $25 to $20 and lower in competition with open-edge board. In many markets Sheetrock was not sold at all but Crown, a cut rate closed-edge board, was being sold by USG at prices as low as $16 per thousand. Supra, pp. 38–40, 53–55, 67–68.

While these conditions were spoken of as a "price war", nevertheless they establish that, in free and open competition with unpatented board the so-called Utzman closed-edge board, a "superior" product, could not command a price better than from $16 to $20 per thousand—which was about two dollars higher than open-edge board (Ex. 620, R. 6411). It is submitted that these figures measure the value of USG's Utzman patent as compared to unpatented board, and thus demonstrate with the clarity of a laboratory test the actual extent of the pecuniary reward to which the owner of the patent at that time was entitled.

Once the licenses were generally signed in May 1929 and competition (including that from open edge board) eliminated, the price of wallboard was rapidly pushed up to $22.50 per thousand on July 9, 1929 (Ex. 414, R. 6106), and thereafter, during a period of depression and falling prices, to a high point in 1934 of $28.50 per thousand. At the same time, as the appellees fully understood and intended (R. 622, 5298, 910), the price of plaster and related products "improved." (Fdg. 74, R. 4158). Ordinarily, perhaps, it would have to be assumed that these prices were merely the normal reward due to the patentee's monopoly. On the face of the present record, however, no other conclusion can be drawn, it is submitted, than that USG was reaping a reward where it had not sown; its price control was "unreasonable" and an unlawful extension of the patent grant.

Indeed, when it is considered that during the years 1930 to 1935 the only "principal" patent on which price control could be based was the Haggerty "starch" patent, the case is even more striking. The facts as to the importance of this patent and the manner in which appellees seized upon it as a support for price fixing when the Utzman patent was about to expire have already been related. See pp. 73–87, supra. Moreover, this patent was owned by Universal, which was also an early licensee under Utzman. Nevertheless, Universal was unable to do better than USG in maintaining the price for its board in open competition (R. 3573); during this very period it was in receivership. It is simply inconceivable, therefore, that the high prices which appellees charged the public for board during the five years, 1930–1935, had any relation to what was proper pecuniary reward to USG as purchaser of this patent.

The same is true of the other conditions in this case.

Standardized Product.—One of the first steps appellees took was to price out of the market No. 2 board, seconds and open-edge board, for all of which there had been a consumer demand. No. 2 board and seconds were eliminated by an agreement among appellees that they be sold at the same price as No. 1 board. Obviously, no one would purchase the seconds and No. 2 board under these circumstances. Open-edge board was eliminated in part by the provision of the license agreements requiring the payment of the same royalty on the unpatented open-edge board as on the closed-edge board (R. 2983, see pp. 108–114, supra). In addition, all board has been standardized as to size by agreeing upon price differentials for other sizes bearing no relation to the variation from standard and prohibitively costly. And a uniform system of packaging was adopted. This complete standardization was accomplished by agreement and was possible only because all manufacturers were parties to the combination.

Basing Points and Uniform Billing Weights.—Appellees have adopted a uniform multiple basing-point delivered-price system. All mills are not basing points, with the necessary result that the net return to the vendor differs between customers similarly situated. Appellees have implemented this system by prescribing uniform billing weights which require a manufacturer either to absorb a freight cost or charge the purchaser with "phantom" freight, depending upon whether the board which it manufacturers is heavier or lighter than the arbitrarily agreed upon billing weight. The result is price discrimination probably in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act. See Corn Products Refg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726; Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746.

Uniform Methods of Delivery and Regulations of Trucking.—USG has established for the industry uniform methods of delivery. USG permitted deliveries by truck of certain specified minimum quantities in certain specified areas at a delivered price. In all other areas the licensee was required to charge the prohibitive less than carload price for truck deliveries (supra, pp. 118-119). The result is that USG and not the consumer determines when shipment by truck will effect savings; and USG regulates the competition between truck and rail. The bulletins, in addition, prohibited the delivery of board to the job-site and required that it be delivered first to the dealer's warehouse, and then re-transported to the job-site (supra, pp. 145– 147), which often was uneconomical. USG has also specified the amount of dunnage which may be used in shipping board.

Elimination of Jobbers.—It cannot seriously be disputed that jobbers, as defined in the license agreements and as that term is commonly employed, have been eliminated from the gypsum industry by means of appellees' agreement to charge the the same price as was charged to those who constitute the customers of the jobbers. The only possible pretext for eliminating jobbers is that appellees could not lawfully control the resale price of jobbers and therefore their price competition. Boston Store v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U. S. 8.

Manufacturing Distributors.—While denying a discount to jobbers, appellees have granted a discount to so-called manufacturing distributors. These manufacturing distributors differed from other jobbers only in that they also manufactured gypsum products other than board. These manufacturing distributors, already engaged as they were in the manufacture of gypsum products, were natural potential competitors of appellees. In addition, they possessed an incentive to manufacture board since their competitive position in the sale of gypsum products would be weakened if they were unable to sell a full line of products. By granting them the right to purchase at a discount, appellees removed at least one of their incentives for entering the board business. Moreover, appellees agreed to sell only to those manufacturing distributors approved by USG. This permitted appellees to control the prices at which the distributors resold board.

Prices of Unpatented Products.—Appellees have refused to sell board to a manufacturer[48] who sold plaster, an unpatented product, below prevailing industry prices. The complete exclusion of this manufacturer from trade in all board was of course possible only because all manufacturers of board were parties to the combination. In addition, appellees have agreed that they will not reduce the price of plaster or other products for the purpose of influencing the sale of board.

Board Survey.—USG organized a separate corporation in 1932 to police the license agreements. Not only were the sales of licensees subject to scrutiny and investigation but those of USG as well (Fdg. 20, R. 4143). Nothing of the sort was done in the General Electric case. Obviously, when USG joined with the others and permitted its own prices and practices as well as theirs to be policed, it was giving up a right under the general law and not merely protecting its patent monopoly. It would not have needed to be protected against itself, if it were not that it was cooperating with the licensees to eliminate price competition. Cf. Pfotzer v. Aqua Systems, Inc., 162 F. 2d 779 (C. C. A. 2).

[48] Cardiff, see pp. 149–151, supra.

Licensee Meetings.—A great many matters having to do with the detailed regulation of the industry were taken up by the appellees at licensee meetings. Among the matters discussed were commission men; these were eliminated. Trade discounts were fixed at 30 days net, 2 per cent 10 days. It was even sought to regulate the medium of payment, inasmuch as National had taken Chicago Worlds Fair bonds. Consignment sales and the establishment or continuance of warehouses at a dealer's place of business were proscribed (supra, pp. 142–143). USG also prohibited certain types of advertising, such as donations to a dealer for its baseball club, donations or sales below cost of carpenters aprons and the painting of signs on dealers' fences (supra, pp. 147–149).

We think it obvious that none of these restrictions could have been accomplished except by agreement among all the manufacturers in the industry. None bears any direct relationship to the USG patents, although all have in common the element of elimination of methods of competition which might lead to lower prices. None in our opinion is reasonably adapted to the securing of a proper pecuniary award for the patents nor designed to protect the licensor in the enjoyment of its patent monopoly. The notion that appellees must be permitted to control the price of related products in order to make price control effective was repudiated in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent

Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 666, where the Court said:

> The necessities or convenience of the patentee do not justify any use of the monopoly of the patent to create other monopolies.

Cf. B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495, 498.

It has been possible, of course, only to consider one of appellee's activities at a time. But only when they are looked at as a whole can their full import be appreciated. The result of the restrictions imposed under the licenses has been a complete regimentation of the industry not proportioned in any sense to the normal values of the patents themselves. The court below found, and appellees argue, that each type of restriction bore a relation to the price of gypsum board, and hence that each came within the General Electric doctrine. We do not deny that there was a relation between the price of board and such restrictions as, for example, the refusal to permit deliveries of goods to the job-site or sales on consignment.[24] It can be said that if one licensee sells on consignment he may take trade from another, or from USG, and hence, possibly, diminish to some extent the profit which USG or such other licensee may have expected to make.

[24] It is difficult to see, however, how the refusal to sell board to Cardiff because of fear that it might reduce the price of the plaster it manufactured and sold bore any relation to the price of board.

It is clear that if a patentee may control and regulate under the General Electric doctrine all business activities which have any relation to the price at which the patented product is sold, the result will be an extension of the patent privilege over matters clearly not within the patent grant. Thus, for example, appellees apparently treated sales of plaster by a manufacturer of board at what they regarded as sub-normal prices as a method of reducing the price of board. It may be true that dealers will prefer to purchase board from manufacturers who will furnish plaster at reduced prices. But nevertheless, to prevent manufacturers who sell board from reducing the price of unpatented plaster clearly is allowing the owners of the patent on board to "tamper with" the price of an unpatented commodity. Cf. United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 221.

Such a result would be clearly inconsistent with the many cases in which this Court has held that patentees may not so extend the scope of their patent monopoly. We do not believe that such practices can be regarded as normally and reasonably adapted to secure a pecuniary reward for the patent monopoly, under the General Electric case.

IF APPELLEES' COMBINATION IS SANCTIONED BY THE GENERAL ELECTRIC CASE, THAT CASE SHOULD BE OVERRULED

Even if the district court's findings are fully accepted, the facts of this case show a price fixing system going far beyond anything legitimate under the patent law and clearly inconsistent with the policy and provisions of the antitrust law. We think this appears from the face of the opinion of the court below. That court felt that it was required by the General Electric case to sustain the validity of such a combination. The very fact that the General Electric doctrine can be thought to go that far suggests its unsoundness. We submit that if this Court is of the view that appellees' price fixing combination is sanctioned by the General Electric decision, that decision should be re-examined and overruled.

In our brief filed last term in United States v. Line Material Co. (No. 8, this Term), p. 40–68, we have set forth at some length the reasons why we are convinced that the General Electric case was wrongly decided. We reaffirm that argument here; in the interest of avoiding repetition the Court is respectfully referred to the Line brief for our basic theory as to why the General Electric case is unsound. In what follows it is proposed briefly to apply the arguments there presented in the context of this case.

A. THE RULE IS UNCERTAIN AND DIFFICULT OF APPLICATION

It is, of course, clear that if the General Electric case means that all prices and conditions imposed by a licensor upon his licensee are proper so long only as they are related in some degree, however remote, to furnishing pecuniary reward to the inventor—or his corporate assignee—there would be little difficulty in applying the case, however horrendous the result. However narrow the patent, or however extensive the regulation, all would be proper.

The Court has never applied the rule to sanction such a result. The holder of a patent is not to be given a blanket authority to carve out such exceptions to the antitrust laws as he may see fit. The line of cases beginning with Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, which holds that a patentee may not require the purchase of unpatented products from himself, shows clearly that "pecuniary reward" to the patentee is not the sole test, since the patentee unquestionably would get financial "reward" from such an arrangement. Likewise in United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 280, the Court said clearly enough that a patent may not be used both to get a pecuniary reward for the patentee and also to enhance his trade position by bringing all erstwhile competitors together under price control to eliminate competition.

But apart from these instances, to give a construction to the General Electric doctrine limited only by the words "pecuniary reward" would be to ignore the plain words of the opinion. Chief Justice Taft did not say that a patent holder may fix a licensee's prices and methods of sale as he sees fit. He said the patentee may do so: "provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly." These words, however difficult of application, may not be read out of the case.

The empirical test laid down by the Court is deceptively simple. When, however, are conditions of sale "normally and reasonably" adapted to secure pecuniary reward? And, when is the "patent monopoly" one of a scope and importance sufficient to merit pecuniary reward derived from control of a licensee's prices? The opinion is almost devoid of explanation except as the Court says (p. 490): "The higher the price, the greater the profit, unless it is prohibitory." Common observation will show that this statement is doubtful economics; in many cases a lower, not a higher, price will produce greater profits, or pecuniary reward.

The facts of this case give dramatic illustration of the difficulty of determining what price is normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward to the patent holder for his invention. In the first place, as has been demonstrated supra, (pp. 38–40, 53–55, 67–68), the Utzman board could not command better than $20 in 1928–1929 in active competition with unpatented open-edge board. With competition eliminated the price was raised sharply supra (pp. 103–105). This evidence, it is submitted, is a complete demonstration that USG, and its licensees were obtaining "pecuniary reward" not proportioned to what was due as a reward for the patent, but reward which could only come from the elimination of competition.

But, we are fortunate in having that evidence in this case, because there was a period before the price fixing scheme became effective in which the patented product was forced to compete with unpatented board. This was not so as to the Roos patents. In subsequent years, assuming industry operations under the Roos "foam" patents, there is no way of applying the test as to price. The parties, being all the manufacturers in the field, could charge whatever they saw fit. There was not the long established test of a competitive market to put some check on the patentee. And, while it is true that a patent holder may sell at such prices as he sees fit, it by no means follows, as it is submitted the Court in the General Electric case recognized by its proviso, that the patent holder may reach out by contract and impose those prices upon his licensees. Or where, as here, his licensees are willing victims, upon the buying public.

When it comes to determining the "reasonableness" of the "methods of sale" which may be imposed, there is even more difficulty. If "pecuniary reward" were the sole test, aside from any question of reasonableness, the patent holder could tie an industry up tighter than a drum. In fact that is substantially what has been done here. But when the question is posed as to where to draw the line, that is, as to what trade practices are "reasonably adapted" and what are not, there is no certain guide laid down in the decision.

To illustrate by one of the questions in this industry, discussed supra (pp. 147–149), consider the matter of painting dealer's fences. Many complaints were made to Board Survey that one or another of appellees had painted too far. In painting the sign he had painted the fence, and hence might be said to have given the dealer a price concession in the sale of patented board. But, within the General Electric doctrine, how far may USG or a licensee go in painting a sign advertising his wares on a dealer's fence? To state the question is enough to show the difficulty of answering it. The same is true of a great many questions discussed supra (pp. 147–149). But appellees, nonetheless, proceeded to legislate, all ostensibly under the doctrine of the General Electric case, with the result that the industry is now completely regimented.

Turning now to the patent aspect of the decision, the same uncertainty is presented. Assuming as we do, that the Court will declare that no patent other than an article patent will justify price control, the problem is by no means answered. The Court in the General Electric case had before it patents which were deemed to cover completely the making of the tungsten filament lamp and to give the company control of the lamp industry. But when narrow improvement patents are used for price control purposes, as in the present case, an entirely different situation is presented. Surely the most narrow and unimportant improvement patent will not suffice; but where is the line to be drawn?

One of the problems which has long vexed the patent bar is the question in infringement cases of apportioning the profits derived by an infringer upon a wrongful sale of the patented product. In the early case of Seymour v. McCormick, 16 How. 480, the inventor of a seat to be used on a harvester claimed the entire profits upon sale of the harvester by an infringer. That case was easily disposed of by denying the contention, but in succeeding years the problem has come up in many ways and proved very difficult of solution. See Westinghouse Co. v. Wagner Mfg. Co., 225 U. S. 604, 614, and cases cited. There is no certain test, likewise it is submitted, of when a particular patent has so far contributed value to an article that price control of the article could be justified under the General Electric doctrine.

Of course the Court could say, as a matter of convenience, that the holder of a narrow improvement patent or of a process patent should be permitted to control the price and methods of sale of his licensees. Such a rule would at least be easy to apply—unless more than one person owned patents relating to the same article. But that, it is submitted, would not be giving the patent holder a pecuniary reward for his invention alone. On the other hand, price fixing limited to the patentee's invention would, of course, be difficult if not impossible of practical use; buyers pay one price for the finished product, not several prices apportioned to each inventor's contribution. But, as this Court has said in a similar situation, the convenience of the patent holder is not to be consulted as a test of his patent rights. "The necessities or convenience of the patentee do not justify any use of the monopoly of the patent to create another monopoly" Mercoid Corp v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 666.

The result is that a highly unpredictable situation has been created, where relative certainty should prevail. In the present case, as the lower court found (Fdg. 31, R. 4148), the appellees fashioned their combination in supposed compliance with the holding in the General Electric case. The Government submits, on the other hand, that appellees have gone far beyond what was essential to the "protection" of their patents, as said in the Standard Sanitary case, and have entered the field denounced by the Sherman Act.

Although the present case might, as urged in Point I, be decided without reaching the General Electric case, a further expression of the Court should be made either to clarify the test announced in the General Electric case or to abandon it. We submit that the Court should adopt the position it has taken in the case of ordinary price fixing agreements, and abandon any attempt to ascertain whether the price and methods of sale imposed by a licensor upon a licensee are reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly. All such control by a licensor should be declared unlawful.

It will be noted, of course, that the patentee would not by such a holding be denied a proper reward for his invention. He would still be entitled to make such profit as he properly could from the exclusive right to make, use or vend the article in a competitive market, or, if he saw fit he might forego his patent protection and license others on a royalty basis. If he wishes to maintain a very high price for the patented article he may make the royalty correspondingly high; but he certainly is entitled to no more than the superiority of the patented product will command in the market. There is no suggestion in the present case that such a royalty would not have given adequate protection to USG, the dominant manufacturer in the gypsum industry, for its patent monopoly, assuming its patents to have been valuable. But, for the Court to fashion other means to secure reward for the patentee by giving him control over his licensees' prices and methods of sale, and then to attempt to limit that right by saying it may only go so far as necessary to protect the patentee in the enjoyment of his patent monopoly, is to create a rule which, whatever else may be said of it, is impossible of administration.

Here, as the Court said in United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U. S. 392, with respect to "reasonable prices," conditions of sale which may be "reasonably adapted" properly to secure pecuniary reward to an inventor at a given time, or under certain conditions of the market, may become entirely unreasonable at a subsequent time. And, not only is the rule difficult of administration but, by similar token, from the point of view of industry and business, it affords no certain guide to lawful action. The language of Mr. Justice Stone puts the matter with complete clarity (p. 398):

> Moreover, in the absence of express legislation requiring it, we should hesitate to adopt a construction making the difference between legal and illegal conduct in the field of business relations depend upon so uncertain a test as whether prices are reasonable—a determination which can be satisfactorily made only after a complete survey of our economic organization and a choice between rival philosophies.

B. THE RULE LEADS TO CONSEQUENCES OF A SORT CONDEMNED BY THE ANTITRUST LAWS

The rule, though announced as a means of protecting a patent holder in the enjoyment of his patent monopoly, lends itself readily to the accomplishment of restraints of trade. Once it is granted that a patent holder may go into the market and offer not only the use of his patent, but price protection as well, he has been given a powerful weapon with which to subvert the purposes of Congress as declared in the Sherman Act.

It is clear that the situation long existing in the gypsum industry is exactly the opposite of what should exist in a free economy. Prices are fixed, the commodity is standardized, methods of sale are regulated and all competition at whatever level is eliminated. Such things are a more or less inevitable consequence of the rule that a patentee may fix his licensee's prices, regardless of how carefully the Court may seek to condition the right. The additional reward which the rule may give the patentee to which he is fairly entitled, if any, is to be balanced against the very great potentialities for harm to the public which the rule possesses.

That the right to fix prices leads to the elimination of all competition can easily be demonstrated on the facts of this case. Consider for example, the situation of Beaver in 1926 after it had signed the USG-Beaver license agreement (R. 39).

Waiving all question of whether Blagden intended by signing the agreement to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices, as he probably did, that is exactly what anyone in his situation would be persuaded to do. Blagden appreciated that price control would not be successful unless all other members of the industry were likewise under license. He frankly told Avery that unless general recognition of the USG patents were obtained it would be necessary to reduce prices in order to meet the competition from open-edge board. (Ex. 185, R. 5346.) Moreover, as promised (Ex. 185, R. 5346), Blagden proceeded to contact the various members of the industry to persuade them to take out licenses. In talking with Brown of Certain-teed, for example, he said: "I told him that, undoubtedly, if he were in with the others he would get the benefit of stabilization" (R. 831). In other words Blagden recognized that the obvious way to correct his competitive disadvantage due to the royalty, as well as to meet the competitive threat, was to get everyone into the same boat, so to speak. Then, with that accomplished, as Blagden further told Brown, prices could be stabilized (R. 831).

Price control makes each licensee, almost of necessity, an ardent proponent of industry wide licensing. Consider further the case of Universal, one of the early licensees. The company, caught in a sharp competitive fight, went into receivership, although it alone had both the starch patent and the license for Utzman. Holland, like Blagden, felt impelled to do everything he could to talk the industry into coming together under the licenses (R. 932). He definitely wanted to have prices stabilized, not only for board but for all industry products, and the USG license agreement with price control afforded him a means to that end (Ex. 147, R. 5298). The court below in its opinion said, in fact, that Holland's actions were all for the very purpose of helping his company and the others "out of their unfortunate financial situation" (R. 4114). No better illustration could be given of the cumulative force of the right to control prices.

Whether the patent is important or not, moreover, becomes a matter of secondary consequence when price control is involved. Haggerty, of National, was very much concerned about what could be done about price control after the Utzman patent expired on August 6, 1929 (Ex. 205, R. 5370). Holland explained, "you will remember that Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available * * *" (Ex. 206, R. 5371). What the other patents were was incidental; it was enough for Haggerty and Holland and Avery, at least that there were other patents available

Weak and dubious patents will serve, if no others are available. The Haggerty starch patent, for example, had been known to the industry for several years before it was suddenly promoted to a place of importance in the summer of 1929. According to Brown there was "some doubt as to the strength of this Starch Patent" (Ex. 231, R. 5403). Then the idea was conceived of using both the starch and the bubble patents "so a combination of the two systems would give a patent to work under" after the Utzman patent expired in August and pending the time when the Roos bubble patents should issue (ibid). Whether the combined patents were useful was again a matter of minor concern; the important thing was to have some patent so that "patent control" would "continue without a break" (Ex. 231, R. 5404).

Moreover, once a licensing arrangement has been set up in an industry, the same force that created it serves to maintain it. The parties all agree, as in this case, not to contest the validity of any of the patents, irrespective of how invalid or how limited in scope they may be. And, though other patents of equal or even superior worth may be at hand, there is less incentive to use them, since to do so might upset the price control arrangement. Of course, it is not to be supposed that all research will be discontinued, since it is essential to have new patents of some sort available if for no other reason than to permit a perpetuation of price control.

But these are only the more obvious consequences of the rule. Once an industry embarks on price control there is no logical stopping place. Today they fix the price of board; tomorrow it becomes necessary to police the sales of plaster and related products sold in conjunction with board. Since jobbers may sometimes cut the resale price of board, as they have the legal right to do, jobbers are eliminated. The rule has far reaching and unpredictable consequences, inimical to a free economy.

Quite apart from any question as to the legality of these actions, it is surely demonstrated that price control is a powerful inducement to bring about a complete elimination of competition. As the Court said in United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 281:

> The extent to which that inducement in a given case will have or has had the desired effect is difficult, if not impossible, of measurement. The forces which that influence puts to work are subtle and incalculable. Active and vigorous competition then tends to be impaired, not from any preference of the public for the patented product, but from the preference of the competitors for a mutual arrangement for price-fixing which promises more profit if the parties abandon rather than maintain competition.

C. PRICE CONTROL TENDS TO DEFEAT THE OBJECTIVES OF THE PATENT LAWS

The primary objective of the patent laws is the encouragement of invention, reward to the patentee, as this Court has often said, being secondary and merely a means to that end. Presumably the Court in the General Electric case was of the view that increasing the patentee's reward by permitting him to control his licensee's prices and methods of sale would have the effect of stimulating invention. We submit, to the contrary, that price control, instead of promoting this objective, tends to defeat it.

Necessity, it has been said, is the mother of invention. But, however that may be, profit to the inventor—or to his corporate employer—is not an inconsiderable inducement. The Court in the General Electric case appears to have based its decision, in part, on the assumption that the greater the reward that can be heaped on a single inventor, or his corporate-employer, the greater will be the inducement to invention. And, hence, the patent system will serve that much more certainly "to promote the progress of Science and useful Arts" (Const. Art. I, Sec. 8).

The facts of this case demonstrate the error of that assumption. Price control, instead of encouraging invention, has destroyed the principal incentive to research and discovery. Since 1929 the gypsum industry has been held in a patent strait-jacket, so to speak. Unless the arrangement is declared illegal, it will continue until 1954, when the third Roos foam patent expires, and beyond that indefinitely if appellees can find some other minor improvement or process patent to serve as an excuse for its continuation. But, so long as USG fixes a price at which everyone can make a relatively sure and noncompetitive profit, there is no need either for USG or anyone else to bestir himself to develop a new or better product.

The real value of a patent, as measured by what royalty it could command on its merits, is completely distorted when it is offered with price control. The licensee buys price protection. And, though the royalties amount to a substantial sum, as Avery reported to his shareholders in 1929 (Ex. 332, R. 5986), the principal advantages both to licensor and licensee lie in the general manufacture and sale of a uniform product. The licensee recoups his royalty payments from the enhanced price to the public, and the licensor makes both that profit, which he could not get except for the price control provisions, plus the royalties.

The price control system, however, not only removes the incentive to invent; it, for the same reason promotes the use of narrow and doubtful patents. The members of the industry most affected and who might be relied upon in defence of their own business life to contest the validity of such patents, customarily agree to keep quiet in the interest of profits. In this case USG insisted from the beginning that each licensee must recognize the validity of the USG patents and, in the case of the Roos "foam" patents, the licensees covenanted five years before they were issued not to contest validity.

The consequence is both unfair to the public and destructive of the purposes of the patent system. As this Court has said: "It is as important to the public that competition should not be repressed by worthless patents, as that the patentee of a really valuable invention should be protected in his monopoly." Pope Mfg. Co. v. Gormully, 144 U. S. 224, 234. The patent system rests on an assumption that a patentee by contributing a valuable discovery is entitled to a reward; to the extent that price control distorts the usual test of patent importance and restrains those who would ordinarily be impelled to contest invalid patents a reward is given where none is earned. In such measure price control is destructive of the patent system itself.

The importance of these considerations to the public has been recognized by this Court. In Sola Electric Company v. Jefferson Electric Company, 317 U. S. 173, a price control case, the Court refused to apply the rule that a licensee may not contest the validity of his licensor's patents where to do so would "fasten upon the public as well as the petitioner the burden of an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act * * *" (p. 177). And, more recently this view was stated to be "firmly grounded upon the broad public interest in freeing our competitive economy from the trade restraints which might be imposed by price-fixing agreements stemming from narrow or invalid patents." Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394, 400.

These cases, it will be noted, go so far as possible on their facts to aid the licensee in freeing the patent system of narrow and invalid patents. But they represent the unusual situation, where some licensee finally decides to break away from the price fixing combination. The root of the matter, though, is price control, which, as in the present case, is often the principal inducement to the creation of such combinations in the first place. The Court should not hesitate now, it is submitted, to take the next step and deny altogether the right of a licensor to bring his competitors together by means of a price control license.

In so doing, of course, the Court would not rest its decision solely on the tendency of price control to give currency to doubtful patents. The rule of the General Electric case, in actual operation, destroys the incentive to invention, contrary to the basic purposes of the patent laws; it tends almost inevitably, as in this case, to the sort of restraints condemned by the Sherman Act; it is difficult of administration, and affords no certain guide to business; it provides a "reward" to the inventor, not suggested by Congress, where so far as appears a royalty would be wholly sufficient. For these reasons, we submit, the General Electric case should now be overruled.

IN A PROCEEDING UNDER SECTION 4 OF THE SHERMAN ACT, THE GOVERNMENT MAY SHOW THE INVALIDITY OF PATENTS RELIED UPON TO JUSTIFY A PRICE FIXING COMBINATION

Up to this point we have argued that, even assuming USG's patents to be valid, appellees' conduct was in violation of the Sherman Act. The Court need reach the issue here discussed as to the Government's right to assert the invalidity of the patents only if it rejects each of our prior arguments. However, the question is of such importance in the administration of the anti-trust laws and the patent law that we submit a decision on this point would be in the public interest.

Appellees have pleaded that their price fixing combination is justified because it operates under the protection of "valid patent monopolies" conferred upon USG by the ownership of patents. The only so-called "principal patents" now owned by USG and upon which price fixing could be justified are the three Roos "foam" patents. The validity of none of these patents has been tested. The Government pleaded in rebuttal, by amending its complaint, that each of these patents was invalid for numerous reasons such as lack of invention, indefiniteness, etc. (R. 349). Appellees moved to strike these allegations, or, in the alternative, for partial judgment dismissing that part of the Government's complaint. The court (Bland, J. dissenting) rendered an opinion holding that the Government was without power to attack the validity of these patents (R. 369–395), and entered an order granting appellees' motion (R. 396).[88]

The novel question presented by this ruling may be simply stated: A price fixing agreement based upon an invalid patent is a violation of the Sherman Act. Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173; Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394; MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402. Section 4 of that Act provides that "it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States * * * under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations." The question is whether Congress meant what it said, or whether an exception in favor of violations based upon invalid patents should be read into the general directive of Congress. The Court has not passed upon this precise question, but we submit its decisions in analogous situations negatives the existence of any such exception.

There is a "broad public interest in freeing our competitive economy from the trade restraints * * * imposed by price-fixing agreements stemming from narrow or invalid patents." Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., supra, at p. 400. So overwhelming is this public interest that a private individual acting solely for his personal pecuniary profit may establish the violation of the Sherman Act by showing the invalidity of the patent on which it is based, despite the fact that he has by agreement with the patentee acknowledged and agreed not to question the validity of the patent. See Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., supra; Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., supra; MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., supra. In the Sola case the Court said in emphatic terms (p. 177):

> Local rules of estoppel which would fasten upon the public as well as the petitioner the burden of an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act must yield to the Act's declaration that such agreements are unlawful, and to the public policy of the Act which in the public interest precludes the enforcement of such unlawful agreements.

The present case is not a mere private litigation. It is not instituted to favor one individual at the expense of another. The Government has brought this suit, pursuant to Congressional com mand, to protect the "broad public interest" re ferred to in the Katzinger case, supra, and ther is no other way in which the Government can dis charge its obligation to the public. Under such cir cumstances it follows a fortiori that the Govern ment is not estopped to assert the invalidity o USG's patents. Indeed, we think the Court recog nized this to be true in United States v. America Bell Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224, when it said (pp 264–265):

> Suits may be maintained by the Govern > ment in its own courts to set aside one of it > patents not only when it has a proprietar > and pecuniary interest in the result, bu > brought the suit simply to help an indi > vidual; making itself, as it were, the instru > ment by which the right of that individual against the patentee can be established, then it becomes subject to the rules governing like suits between private litigants.

The Telephone case, supra, held that the Attorney General was without authority, under the common law or by statute, to bring an action to set aside a patent upon the bare allegation that in his opinion the Patent Office had failed to give proper weight to a prior patent. In reaching this conclusion, the Court made statements much stressed in appellees' brief and the majority opinion below which we believe serve to point up distinctions favorable to the Government. These statements are:

> * * * the Government is as much bound by the laws of Congress as an individual, and when Congress has created a tribunal to which it has given exclusive determination in the first instance of certain questions of fact and has specifically provided under what circumstances that determination may be reviewed by the courts, the argument is a forcible one that such determination should be held conclusive upon the Government, subject to the same limitations as apply in suits between individuals [p. 268].
> Least of all was it intended to be affirmed that the courts of the United States, sitting as courts of equity, could entertain jurisdiction of a suit by the United States > to set aside a patent for an invention on the mere ground of error of judgment on the part of the patent officials. That would be an attempt on the part of the courts in collateral attack to exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Patent Office, although no appellate jurisdiction has been by the statutes conferred [p. 269].

This holding and these statements are inapposite. The Government here proceeds upon the express authority of Section 4 of the Sherman Act. Moreover, it does not ask the Court to exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the Patent Office.[86] The proceeding does not seek the cancellation of USG's patents.[87] All that is sought

[86] The majority opinion below stated that the Government "conceded in the oral argument" that it "is seeking a judicial determination that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents and that they are for that reason invalid" (R. 372). The Government has assigned this as error (R. 4178). The Government at no time made any such concession. The Court subsequently explained its statement by saying that it was a matter of "interpretation" (R. 736.)

[87] The majority opinion below concluded a review of the Government's prayer for relief with the statement that (R. 372–373): "Accordingly, so far as the effect upon the defendants and the patents is concerned, the distinction between this suit and an independent cancelation proceeding is not substantial." We submit that the relief we seek is for violations of the Sherman Act and would be the same and entirely proper if appellees' combination is unlawful for any reason other than the invalidity of USG's patents. See United States v. National Lead Co., No. 89, 1946 Term, decided June 23, 1947. Cf. B. B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U. S. 495.

is the right to show the fact of the invalidity of USG's patents in a direct attack upon an unlawful combination. As the Court said in Pratt v. Paris Gas Light & Coke Co., 168 U. S. 255, 259, "There is a clear distinction between a case and a question arising under the patent laws." And it is settled that a private party may show the fact of patent invalidity in any case where that fact would be material to the litigation. Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, Inc., 279 U. S. 388. There an action had been brought in a state court to have Becher declared trustee ex maleficio of a patent upon the ground that not Becher but the plaintiff was the true inventor. Suit was then brought in the district court by Becher to enjoin the state action for the reason that to permit the fact to be shown that Becher was not the first inventor would be to sanction a collateral attack which would show the patent to be invalid. This argument was effectively answered by Mr. Justice Holmes in these words (p. 391):

> Again, even if the logical conclusion from the establishing of Oppenheimer's claim is that Becher's patent is void, that is not the effect of the judgment. Establishing a fact and giving a specific effect to it by judgment are quite distinct. * * *
> That decrees validating or invalidating patents belong to the Courts of the United States does not give sacrosanctity to facts > that may be conclusive upon the question in issue. A fact is not prevented from being proved in any case in which it is material, by the suggestion that if it is true an important patent is void—and, although there is language here and there that seems to suggest it, we can see no ground for giving less effect to proof of such a fact than to any other.

If a private individual may ask a state court to determine the fact of invalidity when it is material to the issues, it is no more an exercise of appellate jurisdiction over the Patent Office when it is material to the issues in a suit to enforce the Sherman Act.

The district court appeared to be influenced by a notion that it would be a breach of good governmental morals to permit the Government to show the fact of invalidity. But the ex parte determinations of its Patent Office, based in large part upon the data submitted by the applicants themselves, are not conclusive. Reckendorfer v. Faber, 92 U. S. 347; Dunbar v. Myers, 94 U. S. 187. In the Reckendorfer case, which held invalid for lack of invention a patent having to do with a combination drawing pencil and eraser, the Court said (p. 351):

> Before the commissioner is authorized to issue a patent, it must appear to him that the claimant is justly entitled to a patent; i. e., that his art, machine, or manufacture, possesses all the qualities before mentioned. The commissioner must also be satisfied, that, if it possesses these qualities, it is sufficiently useful and sufficiently important to justify him in investing it with the prima facie respect arising from the governmental approval * * *

It is nowhere declared in the statute that the decision of the commissioner, as to the extent of the utility or importance of the improvement, shall be conclusive upon that point; * * *

The Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 851 (35 U. S. C. 68) is pertinent in this regard. This Act which is mainly concerned with conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to entertain suits when the United States is itself an infringer of a patent, contains a provision that "in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in Title Sixty of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise." This provision is significant as a Congressional belief that a patent is no more final and conclusive on the Government than on any one else. It is particularly significant in its implication that there is no impropriety in permitting the Government to queston validity in a proper case. In Slawson v. Grand Street R. R. Co., 107 U. S. 649, the lower court dismissed an infringement action on the ground that the patent was invalid even though the defendant had not pleaded invalidity. This Court, in affirming the action of the lower court, said (p. 652):

> We think the practice thus sanctioned is not unfair or unjust to the complainant in a suit brought on letters-patent. If they are void because the device or contrivance described therein is not patentable, it is the duty of the court to dismiss the cause on that ground whether the defence be made or not. It would ill become a court of equity to render a money decree in his favor for the infringement of letters-patent which are void on their face for want of invention.

We suggest that it would "ill become a court of equity", faced with the problem of ascertaining the intention of Congress, to find an intent to observe a concept of governmental morality which Congress itself has specifically failed to embrace.

In no case has this Court so much as intimated that the Government might be estopped in the enforcement of its anti-trust laws by the existence of invalid patents. The implication is definitely to the contrary. In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, the complaint charged a conspiracy to restrain trade in gasoline by means of a pool of patents covering the cracking process and a cross-licensing system. The case was tried before a Master. The Government offered in evidence two patents to show that certain of the defendants' patents were anticipated and to show that defendants' patents were granted through error or mistake on the part of the Patent Office. The defendants objected, inter alia, on the ground that the Government could not introduce evidence to show the invalidity of patents (No. 378, 1930 Term, Record Vol. 1, p. 411). The matter was certified to the district court which entered an order that the evidence should be received (ibid., 423–424). Subsequently, when the Master's Report came before the district court for disposition two of the questions presented were whether the Government could question the validity or scope of the patents it had issued and, if so, whether the patents were invalid (33 F. 2d 617). The court stated that it was "divided respecting the right of the government to attack the validity of the patents in these proceedings" (p. 623). The issue of the right to attack the validity of the patents was avoided by affirming the Master's finding that the patents were valid. The district court, nevertheless, found for the Government and the defendants appealed to this Court, which disposed of the present question as follows (283 U. S., at p. 181):

> Inasmuch as the Government did not appeal from these findings, we need not consider any of the issues concerning the validity or scope of the cracking patents; and we accept the finding that they were > acquired in good faith. Neither the findings nor the evidence on this issue supply any ground for invalidating the contracts.

We think this case affords a measure of support for the Government in this case.

There have been, in addition, dicta in recent opinions of this Court in antitrust proceedings involving patents which also afford support for the Government's position. In Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 456, Mr. Justice Stone said, "In considering that question we assume the validity of the patents, which is not questioned here." In the Masonite case, 316 U. S. 265, 276, it was said, "We assume arguendo that the patents in question, owned by Masonite, are valid." In United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, the Court said (p. 248):

> The Government has not put in issue the validity of the lens patents, but argues that their scope does not extend beyond the structure of the lens blanks and consequently affords no basis for the Corporation's restrictions on the sale of the finished lenses which the wholesalers and finishing retailers fashion from blanks purchased from the Lens Company * * *.
>
> The record gives no account of the prior art and does not provide us with other material to which, if available, resort might appropriately be had in determining the nature of an alleged invention and the validity and scope of the patent claims founded upon it.

These statements strongly suggest that the Government has the right to attack the validity of a patent in an antitrust proceeding.

The precise question now raised was considered by Judge Westenhaver in United States v. Porcelain Appliance Corp. (N. D. Ohio, E. Div., Sept. 9, 1926). In an unreported opinion he stated:

> Obviously, this is not a suit by the United States to cancel patents. It is probably beyond the scope of all possible issues to decree certain patents or certain claims thereof to be void. The issue here is whether or not the defendants have organized and are members of an illegal conspiracy and a final decree can probably not have any broader scope. These expressions are not to be taken as the final determination of any such question. However, assuming they correctly state the law, it would still appear that the allegations of the bill are proper and that the testimony in support thereof might be received * * * I can perceive many combinations, in violations of the Sherman antitrust law, in which patents or claims thereof, invalid in view of prior art, or limited in nature, may be wrongfully used in building up or maintaining such an illegal conspiracy * * *

As a consequence of the trial court's ruling the Government, of course, was not permitted to introduce evidence for the purpose of showing the invalidity of the "principal" patents upon which appellees now rely to justify their price fixing. However, evidence introduced for other purposes does in fact show the invalidity of the article claims of the Roos "foam" patents. We submit that it would be consonant with the position which this Court took in Slawson v. Grand Street R. R. Co., supra, now to examine this evidence of invalidity and pass upon the validity of these patents.

The principal ground of invalidity to be urged is that Roos does not describe a new or novel article or product. Claim 10 of the third Roos patent, which may be regarded as typical of the article claims of this patent, reads upon wallboard, which of course is old, and then goes on to say "having a porous body comprising a hardened cementitious material enclosing a plurality of voids encased in tough pliable films" (R. 114). We have already demonstrated in some detail that this claim does not describe a new or novel article (supra, pp. 229–230, 237–239). It is evident, therefore, that insofar as the Roos invention is based simply on the making of a "porous" or "cellular" wallboard, his claims are void. It is further submitted that the words of the claim "enclosing a plurality of voids encased in tough pliable films" add nothing to the claim.[88] A porous or cellular board naturally would enclose a plurality of voids. If there is a distinction, the claim is wholly devoid of language to make the distinction clear and precise. So far as appears cells are voids and voids are cells. There is nothing, moreover, to indicate the size of the "voids", their shape or arrangement, or even their number, except as they are said to constitute a "plurality."[88] Only the final words of the claim—"encased in tough pliable films"—have a semblance of novelty about them. But these words constitute a misdescription of the finished product; they refer to the board in course of manufacture when the foam made up of "tough pliable films" is incorporated into the wet gypsum slurry. When the gypsum hardens or sets the bubbles have served their purpose. Then, as is admitted in the specifications, "the tough film envelope of the confined air or gas aggregate is replaced * * *" (R. 110). In other words, the bubbles evaporate in the drying process and leave merely a porous or cellular product which is old in the art.

[88] Claims expressed in terms so general and vague as these have uniformly been held to invalidate a patent. The public is given no means whatever by which to identify the patented product. General Electric Co. v. Wabash Appliance Corp., 304 U. S. 364; United Carbon Co. v. Binney Co., 317 U. S. 228. The further phrase, "tough pliable films", is equally meaningless. When are films "tough" or "pliable"? The article claims are accordingly void not only for lack of novelty but because not expressed in clear and precise terms.

The remaining article claims of this patent are likewise void and for the same reasons. The article claims of the first two Roos patents (Nos. 2,017,022 and 2,079,338) need not be considered, since they do not read upon a wallboard but merely upon an intermediate product, a cementitious material, which can be used in the manufacture of products of many types and descriptions.

We submit that to prevent appellees from "fasten[ing] upon the public * * * the burden of an agreement in violation of the Sherman Act" (Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173, 177), this Court should now hold that the Government may show the invalidity of appellees' patents and should also hold on the present record that the article claims of the Roos "foam" patents are invalid.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth herein it is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Civil Action No. 8017

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff, against

UNITED STATES GYPSUM COMPANY, ET AL.,

Defendants

OPPOSING STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

Plaintiff's "Statement as to Jurisdiction" herein fails accurately to set forth the nature of the case and the decision dismissing the complaint on the merits. Rather plaintiff's statement presents the case in terms of what it charged but failed to prove after a protracted trial and unusually careful consideration of the evidence by a three-judge court, as fully appears in the final opinion of the Court. It totally disregards the findings of facts of the Trial Court which are to the effect that the evidence not only failed to establish the charges but proved that the facts were directly contrary thereto. We submit that a fair appreciation of the facts and decision will demonstrate that no substantial question is presented for review by the Supreme Court.

The case involved an attack by plaintiff on patent license agreements entered into at various times between United States Gypsum Company (hereinafter referred to as USG) as licensor and the other defendant companies as licensees. The licenses covered the manufacture and sale of patented gypsum board under patents owned by USG. The history and background of these licenses is as follows.

Prior to 1912, gypsum board was a rough and crude product. It was made in a slow, cumbersome way, by pouring a mix of calcined gypsum and water between pieces of paper and pressing the mass on a table. After the gypsum had set, the pieces of board were dried out by stacking them in the open air under sheds. In 1912, USG commenced the development of more satisfactory products and more efficient methods of manufacture. An important advance was in the making, by virtue of patent No. 1,034, 746, issued in 1912 to USG on application of an inventor-employee named Clarence W. Utzman, of "closed-edge board." This patent covered board with closed or protected edges and eliminated the wastage and breakage which were attendant on the prior product. Various other improvements were developed, including a board making machine, the use of foam as a substitute for sawdust as an "aggregate" in the gypsum board to lighten the board, and the use of starch to increase the bond between paper and core from which the board principally derives its strength. Metallized board was devised for purposes of insulation; and a gypsum lath perforated in such a manner as to increase the fire resisting qualities of a wall structure. These improvements were covered by patents—product, process, and machine—many of which were issued to USG; others were acquired by that company. A demand arose in the trade for these improved products, and companies other than USG commenced to copy them. There ensued many years of litigation in which USG strove to enforce and eventually succeeded in enforcing, its patent rights. (Finding of Fact, No. 5).

Prior to 1917 the Bestwall Manufacturing Company (Bestwall) commenced the manufacture of closed-edge board. USG sued for infringement and won. Bestwall Mfg. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co., 270 Fed. 542 (C. C. A. 7th, 1921), cert. denied, 263 U. S. 713 (1923). Bestwall had, however, in the course of the litigation, been acquired by The Beaver Products Company, Inc. (Beaver), and USG by a supplemental bill sued both of these companies for infringement and again prevailed. United States Gypsum Co. v. Bestwall Mfg. Co., 15 F. (2d) 704 (N. D. Ill. 1925). These decisions made the manufacture of closed-edge board by a competitor of USG impossible without infringement of USG's patent rights. Prior to the last mentioned decision, Augustus S. Blagden, president of Beaver, made overtures of settlement to Sewell L. Avery, president of USG; he continued these efforts after the decree under the supplemental bill. Avery, at a meeting with Blagden in December, 1925, specified as terms of settlement the payment of damages by Beaver for infringement of USG's patents, acknowledgment by Beaver of the validity of USG's patents, payment of royalties, and the right in USG to fix prices of gypsum board made and sold by Beaver under the Utzman closed-edge patent. A settlement agreement was executed on July 29, 1926, Beaver paying $250,000 cash damages and USG granting Beaver a license to make, use and sell the patented products, to use the patented processes and to make and use the patented machines. (Finding of Fact, No. 6.)

In September, 1925, after the decision against Beaver, USG sued The American Gypsum Company (American) and the Universal Gypsum and Lime Company (Universal) for infringement, and served a notice of infringement upon the Niagara Gypsum Company (Niagara). On September 17, 1926, a settlement and license agreement was entered into with Universal similar to that with Beaver, except that the lump sum payment was approximately $35,000. A license agreement was entered into between USG and the Atlantic Gypsum Products Company (Atlantic) on March 5, 1927. In this instance no damages were paid, Atlantic not having previously made gypsum board. Texas Cement Plaster Company (Texas) signed a license agreement on April 11, 1927 under similar circumstances. (Finding of Fact, No. 7.)

In May, 1929, following further litigation, four more license contracts were entered into between USG and Certain-teed Products Corporation (Certain-teed), National Gypsum Company (National), Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc. (Ebsary), and Niagara Gypsum Company, respectively. In 1923 Certain-teed, originally a manufacturer of roofing products, entered the gypsum industry with the acquisition of the Acme Cement Plaster Company (Acme). In 1926 it commenced the manufacture of open-edge gypsum board at the former Acme plant in Texas. On January 20, 1928, it purchased the assets of Beaver. Beaver was then making a closed-edge board. Certain-teed refused to assume the Beaver-USG settlement agreement and license. USG thereupon, on or about February 21, 1928, instituted suit in the District Court of the United States in Illinois against Certain-teed and Beaver, seeking an injunction against the distribution of the proceeds of sale to the Beaver stockholders and asserting that Certain-teed should be required to assume all liabilities of Beaver under its settlement agreement and license. Certain-teed was required to put up a million dollar bond, or otherwise to suffer a temporary injunction, as security for damages which might be found due to USG. On May 22, 1929, Certain-teed settled this suit with USG, agreeing to pay damages of approximately

$64,000 and to fulfill the obligations of Beaver under its original settlement agreement and license; USG executed in Certain-teed's favor a patent license agreement and the suit was dismissed and the bond released. On May 16, 1929, National settled two patent infringement suits which USG had brought against it, one on November 5, 1926, the other on May 7, 1928, paying on account of damages for past infringement approximately $178,000 and entering into a patent license agreement with USG. Ebsary, which had commenced making open-edge gypsum board in 1928, was granted a patent license by USG on May 22, 1929. This license was not a part of settlement of an infringement claim, since Ebsary had not manufactured closed-edge board and there was no infringement suit or basis therefor against it. Niagara commenced making an open-edge gypsum board, but later made board with a semi-protected edge covered by a Clark application for a patent owned by American. This board had been developed by American in an attempt to compete with USG's closed-edge board. USG claimed that this board infringed its Birdsey patent No. 1,358,508 covering the manufacture of board with a partially closed edge. Priority over the Clark application had been awarded Birdsey by the Commissioner of Patents; this was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in 1926. Clark v. Birdsey, 56 App. D. C. 136, 10 F. (2d) 1001. A contract of settlement was entered into between Niagara in May, 1929, providing for the payment of damages of approximately $28,000 and for a patent license to Niagara. (Finding of Fact, No. 9.)

In 1929 USG owned three applications for patents of Carlisle K. Roos covering cellular core gypsum board produced by the employment of foam or a foaming agent in the core of the board to produce a multitude of cells or voids thereby lightening the board, eliminating the use of sawdust, which had been an unsatisfactory material, as an "aggregate," and resulting in quicker drying. These applications were in interference with an application for a patent by Erick Christian Bayer, a foreign patentee, the American rights to whose patent had been acquired by USG. The Roos applications prevailed in the interference proceeding and Roos patents Nos. 2,017,022, 2,079,338, and 2,080,009 were ultimately issued to USG (October 8, 1935, May 4, 1937, and May 11, 1937, respectively). On May 23, 1929, after the last of the May 1929 license agreements had been executed, Avery of USG described the scope and nature of the Roos bubble board invention and outlined its advantages, including weight reduction, lower freight cost, elimination of the sawdust problem, easier handling and quicker drying, and offered the various licensees above referred to a license on this invention. (Finding of Fact, No. 11.)

Shortly after this, Universal through its president and co-receiver, Eugene Holland, claimed that USG, by using starch in its board to obtain adhesion between the core and paper liners, was infringing two patents owned by Universal known as the Hite and Haggerty patents Nos. 1,230,297 and 1,500,452, respectively. The Hite patent covered a heat insulating material and method of making the same. The Haggerty patent covered a gypsum plaster wallboard employing starch or a cooked carbohydrate in the core of the board to insure a good bond between the core and the paper covering sheets. This had solved the "peeler" trouble in the gypsum board industry and made possible modern high speed production of gypsum board. Without it, high temperatures used to expedite drying of the board would result in defective board in the form of "peelers," i. e., board having insufficient bond between the liners and the core. In 1927 Universal had brought suit in the United States District Court in Buffalo, New York, against National for infringing of the Haggerty patent, demanding an injunction and an accounting, and the court had ruled that the Haggerty patent was valid and infringed (Universal Gypsum & Lime Co. v. Haggerty, 21 F. (2d) 544 (W. D. N. Y. 1927)), and National had posted a substantial bond rather than suffer enforcement of a temporary injunction. Avery told Holland that it was not USG's policy to infringe patent rights and that he would investigate the claim. In June and July of 1929 negotiations were going on between USG and its various licensees in respect of a possible license covering the bubble board invention, and the various companies were investigating to ascertain whether the invention had merit. During this same period Holland continued to discuss with Avery separately the matter of the alleged infringement of the Haggerty and Hite starch patents. As a result of these discussions USG agreed to purchase and did purchase these patents. Universal was in receivership and the sale was a favorable one from its standpoint because it provided Universal with substantial funds permitting it to reorganize and emerge from receivership with its accounts paid. The original and ancillary receivership proceedings were in seven different Federal district courts and the sale was approved by all of these courts on or about November 5, 1929. The sale was consummated in a license contract of November 5, 1929, which settled a claim of USG against Universal for infringement of USG's partially closed-edge patent and the claim of Universal against USG for infringement of the Hite and Haggerty patents. Universal was itself granted a license under these patents and under the Birdsey patent No. 1,358,508 and under patents which might be issued under the Roos and Bayer applications and under numerous other patents. This license contract superseded the 1926 license agreement between USG and Universal. In August, 1929, USG had announced its arrangement to purchase the Haggerty and Hite patents and offered its licensees new licenses which would replace the prior license contracts and include in one document the outstanding patents of the earlier licenses, the Haggerty and Hite patents, and the applications for patents on the Roos bubble board invention. This offer was made subject to the approval of the district courts above referred to. (Finding of Fact, No. 12.)

Niagara on October 8, 1929, Certain-teed on the 15th, National on the 17th, Ebsary on the 18th, and Atlantic on the 21st, entered into new patent license contracts with USG which superseded the previous agreements between these companies and USG, and these new contracts covered the Hite and Haggerty patents and also the anticipated patents under the Roos and Bayer applications as well as the unexpired patents of the earlier contracts. (Finding of Fact, No. 13.)

As mentioned above, USG had in September, 1925, instituted a suit against American for infringement of USG's closed-edge patent. It had also in the same month commenced a suit against American for infringement of the Birdsey patent on partially closed-edge board. American attempted to obtain a more favorable settlement than had been granted to other infringers. USG's infringement suit with respect to the Birdsey patent had been postponed pending settlement negotiations, reinstated, and ultimately tried and decided in favor of USG. Settlement discussions by American were resumed, with renewed efforts to obtain concessions with USG. On November 25, 1929, American finally settled its outstanding litigation with USG on the terms originally offered, i. e., on terms similar to those of the earlier settlements with other companies, and accepted a license from USG similar to the license contracts of the other licensees. American paid in settlement of past infringement approximately $152,000. On April 23, 1930, Kelley Plasterboard Company, Inc. (Kelley) took a similar license. On January 3, 1939, USG consented to the assignment of this license to Newark. Texas did not enter into a license contract in 1929, but continued as a licensee under its license of April 11, 1927, although it was not subject to price control after August 6, 1929, the date of the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent, and no effort was made by any defendant or any agent of any defendant to establish or control the price at which Texas sold gypsum board during the period from August 6, 1929, until February 10, 1937, at which time its license of April 11, 1927, expired and Texas accepted a further license contract similar in form to the November, 1929, contract with the other licensees. (Finding of Fact, No. 14.)

The foregoing outlines the circumstances surrounding the signing of the main patent licenses involved in suit. Under each license royalties were paid and USG reserved the right to establish the minimum prices of patented gypsum board made and sold by each licensee thereunder. Under the earlier licenses, price control was limited to gypsum board made under the Utzman closed-edge patent, and such control terminated at the expiration of that patent on August 6, 1929. Under the later licenses, price control was operative only with respect to gypsum board made under product patents such as the Haggerty starch patent or, when issued, the Roos "bubble board" or foam patents. In other words, the right of the patentee to establish the licensee's minimum price was in all instances limited, by the terms of the contract and in actual operation, to patented board.

Plaintiff attacked these license agreements on various grounds:

> (1) It was claimed that the licenses were not bona fide but were sham agreements executed to disguise illegal purposes. The Trial Court found, and the evidence established, directly the contrary. (Findings of Fact, Nos. 29, 30.) Among other things the Court found that the licenses were openly negotiated between the respective parties, that the licensees took the licenses because they desired to settle or avoid litigation and because they considered it a business necessity to obtain the right to use USG's patents, that each of the companies decided to take a license independently and without regard to what other compaines did, and that the licenses were executed on the faith of the Bement (186 U. S. 70) and General Electric (272 U. S. 476) cases. (Findings of Fact, Nos. 31-38.)

(2) It was claimed that defendants had, in addition to the patent license agreements, informal side agreements that unpatented products would be discontinued; that USG would advance and stabilize the prices for gypsum board; that all the companies would increase their prices on other, unpatented products; and that USG would continue to control prices through the use of other patents after the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent in August, 1929. The Trial Court found, and the evidence established, that no such agreements were made. (Finding of Fact, No. 56.)

(3) It was claimed defendants' operations under the licenses went beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly. The Trial Court found, and the evidence established, that no such improper practices occurred. (Findings of Fact, Nos. 86-87, 89, 94, 99, 104.)

(4) It was claimed that the defendants unlawfully associated themselves in a plan to blanket the gypsum industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices. The Trial Court found, and the evidence established, that there was no such plan. (Finding of Fact, No. 118.)

(5) It was claimed that the General Electric case did not apply. The Trial Court held that there was no distinction between the General Electric case and the case at bar. (Findings of Fact, Nos. 24-28.)

Plaintiff asserts in its "Statement as to Jurisdiction" that the Trial Court ruled, on defendants' motion to dismiss, that every factual issue as to which evidence before the Court did not preponderate in favor of the plaintiff must be resolved against the plaintiff. What the Trial Court actually held was that on a motion to dismiss filed at the close of the plaintiff's case, pursuant to Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it is the duty of the Court to weigh the evidence, to draw inferences therefrom, and if it finds the evidence insufficient to make out a case for the plaintiff, to render a decision for the defendants on the merits and make findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Trial Court so applied the rule and each of its findings against the plaintiff was fully supported by the evidence.

Plaintiff also erroneously states that the Trial Court ruled that defendants did not have the burden of establishing that their price fixing was justified by their patent rights and that the Government had the burden of establishing the contrary. What the Court actually held was that the Government alleged various restraints of trade and commerce and had the burden of proving such alleged restraints. And in connection with allegations on the part of the Government that patent license agreements existed containing restraints which might have been improper without patents, the Trial Court held that the plaintiff had the burden of establishing some reason why the normal consequences which flow from the ownership of a patent should not follow in this case. For example, the Trial Court held that the plaintiff, having asserted that the patent licenses were intended by the parties to accomplish restraints beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly and in actual operation were carried beyond such limits, had the burden of proving the charges made.

Plaintiff asserts that the Trial Court ruled that an agreement among the defendants that all would enter into like price-fixing licensing contracts would not be illegal and that the evidence failed to show that the defendants did so agree. The Court found, and the evidence established, that there was no such agreement. The Court in its opinion said that in the absence of sham licenses and an intent to accomplish objectives beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly such an agreement would not have been illegal.

Plaintiff asserts that the Court held that apart from certain declarations by defendants there was no evidence that the license agreements were "non bona fide" in character or purpose and that the evidence considered on this basis does not establish that the license agreements were sham or designed to achieve restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of the patent rights. The Court, as shown in its opinion, concluded, first, that the evidence introduced by plaintiff shows that the license agreements were executed as bona fide agreements intended to bind each party to the promises made therein, not as sham agreements to disguise illegal purposes, and, second, that the evidence fails to show that the license agreements were executed with intent to gain objectives beyond the proper limits of a patent monopoly in any of the respects charged. The Court also held that the evidence failed to establish that the operations of the defendants were carried beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly and licensing thereunder. In reaching these conclusions the Court first applied the familiar rule that the declarations of certain of the defendants received in evidence subject to connection were binding only upon the declarant, the declarations rule having been invoked by the defendants and the plaintiff having failed, as found by the Court, to prove by evidence outside the declarations the existence of the conspiracy charged. The Court also stated its views as to the meaning of all of the evidence when the declarations were considered as binding not merely upon the declarant but also upon all of the alleged co-conspirators and conclued that the plaintiff still had not proved that the license agreements were executed not as bona fide license agreements but only as sham agreements to give color of legality to the illegal purposes alleged in the complaint or that the operations of the defendants were carried beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly.

Plaintiff asserts that the licensing agreements provided for the fixing of minimum prices on all board made by USG's licensees which embodied any invention claimed in any of 49 patents. Price fixing only applied to product patents and, contrary to the plaintiff's assertion, not only are the two starch patents in evidence but a number of other patents including three patents covering gypsum board made with foam. In connection with such foam patents it may be noted that they are product patents and not process patents as plaintiff repeatedly implies. Moreover, there was evidence and a Finding that the use of starch contemplated by the so-called starch patents, which were also product patents, was essential to the successful manufacture of gypsum board.

Plaintiff further asserted that there was no showing that USG had a patent monopoly covering the vending of board not made under the starch patents and that consequently the price fixing agreement went beyond any patent monopoly which USG was shown to have. The complaint charged that the defendant licensees under their respective license agreements produced and sold patented board embodying the claims of the several product patents held by USG and the showing of which, plaintiff complains, was made by plaintiff itself. Upon the trial plaintiff failed to present any evidence that the gypsum board made and sold by defendants under the patent license agreements was not covered by the patents and the Trial Court made a specific finding to this effect. (Finding of Fact, No. 55.) The application of the elementary rule which the Court applied that a pleader must prove those allegations which are essential to his complaint required the plaintiff to prove that the price fixing went beyond the limits of the patent monopoly. This it failed to do.

The Trial Court held, on the basis of the patents before it, that there was no distinction between such patents, which were product patents covering gypsum board, and the patents covering incandescent lamps in the General Electric case. (Findings of Fact, Nos. 24-28.) The Trial Court referred to those patents the plaintiff introduced which were but a few of the USG patents referred to in the licenses, just as the Court in the General Electric case referred to but three of the 216 patents included in the General Electric-Westinghouse license. That the licenses covered patents which the plaintiff failed to introduce can hardly be used to pose the question of whether the price fixing under the licenses referred to in the complaint went beyond the patent monopoly shown by plaintiff to exist.

It is thus clear that the first question asserted by plaintiff to be substantial on the appeal herein, i.e. "whether the General Electric case validates an agreement to fix prices which is not confined to products over which the licensor has a complete patent monopoly of the vending thereof," is in fact of no substance in this case.

The second question, asserted by plaintiff to be of substance, is whether the General Electric case authorizes "all members of the industry, pursuant to a common invitation," to enter into substantially identical licensing agreements. As we have stated, the evidence established, and the Trial Court found, that each of the licenses in suit was entered into independently by each of the licensees and without regard to what other companies might do. Furthermore, in the absence of sham licenses or an intent to accomplish objectives beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly, a common invitation to make such license agreements could hardly be said to be illegal. The Supreme Court's decision in Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, referred to by plaintiff in this connection, does not apply because there was no question there of the right of a patentee to fix the prices of his licensees under a patent monopoly and the case is clearly distinguishable from the Bement and General Electric cases, as pointed out in the opinion in the Interstate Circuit case and by the Trial Court in its opinion in this case under Topic VIII, pages 149-150. Thus, this question is without substance.

The next question, asserted by plaintiff to be substantial, is whether the General Electric case authorizes all competing manufacturers to "use patent license agreements as a means to organize their industry, increase and stabilize prices, eliminate jobbers, and otherwise regulate the industry in detail." In so far as plaintiff by this intends to imply that a plurality of licenses is wrongful, there can be no escape from the holdings in the General Electric and Bement cases, since, as the Trial Court held, the public is equally excluded and equally subjected to the patent owner's price whether there is no license, one license, or more. The Court also specifically found that the defendants herein did not use their patent license agreements for any of the purposes mentioned and further found specifically that there were no agreements among the defendants to organize the industry or to increase and stabilize prices or to eliminate jobbers or to otherwise regulate the industry, which findings are fully supported by the evidence. The decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Ma- sonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265, referred to by plaintiff in this connection, does not apply since there was no question there as to the validity of a license to manufacture and sell under a patent monopoly, and is clearly distinguishable from the Bement and General Electric cases, as pointed out by the Court in its opinion in the Masonite case and by the Trial Court in its opinion in this case under Topic VIII, pages 150-151. Thus this question is without substance.

Plaintiff asserts that this case raises the question of whether the General Electric case should be overruled and that such a question is a substantial one. It is submitted that the rule of the General Electric case has been followed and reaffirmed by this Court from 1926 until the present time, that the rule has been relied upon by innumerable persons and companies in good faith and that the rule should not be changed by judicial act. We submit, therefore, that this question is not substantial.

The plaintiff asserts that a question of substance is presented because the Trial Court made a ruling that "the Government in a Sherman Act proceeding is not entitled to show the invalidity of the patents under which the defendants assert rights by way of justification for price fixing." This reference to a preliminary ruling of the Trial Court is inaccurate. The point passed upon was whether the Government in an anti-trust case could allege in its complaint that patents issued by the Government were invalid and therein seek a judicial determination that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents. In other words, could the plaintiff in this case thus attack patents on grounds such as lack of invention, lack of novelty or utility and the like, all of which matters are delegated by statute to the Commissioner of Patents for determination prior to the issuance of the patents. A careful reading of the opinion of the Trial Court on this point will show the true issue involved. Thus the Trial Court stated in its opinion on the subject (53 Fed. Supp. 889, at p. 892):

> "It is not charged by the Government in its complaint that the issuance of the patents was obtained by fraud or any other wrongful act. What the Government asserts, in essence, is that, for the reasons set out in paragraph 46(a), the Commissioner erred in issuing the patents. It is to be noted further that the attack upon the validity of the patents, in this aspect of the case, is not upon the ground that they are invalid because being used in violation of the Sherman Act; it is the converse, that the Sherman Act is being violated, through the license agreements, because the patents upon which the agreements are based are invalid. It is also to be borne in mind that, while this is not an independent cancelation proceeding, but an antitrust suit in which the Government contends that the patents are invalid, nevertheless the Government is seeking a judicial determination that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents and that they are for that reason invalid. * * *"

Thus the ruling of the Trial Court was simply to the effect that plaintiff, having granted patents through its Commissioner of Patents to whom the duty was delegated by statute of determining questions of patentability, could not through its attorney general attack such determination in an antitrust suit. In so ruling the Trial Court followed the doctrine announced in United States v. American Bell Telephone Company, 167 U. S. 224. The Court applied a rudimentary principle of fairness and justice by holding that the plaintiff, having once issued patents through the Commissioner of Patents, should not be able to repudiate its own action, in the absence of a charge of fraud in the obtaining of such patents. We submit that an appeal from such a ruling does not present a substantial question.

Finally plaintiff contends that the Trial Court's interpretation of Rule 41(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure presents a question of substance. The point thus raised is simply whether on a motion to dismiss at the close of plaintiff's case it is the duty of the Court to weigh the evidence, to draw inferences therefrom and, if it finds the evidence insufficient to make out a case for the plaintiff, to render a decision for the defendants on the merits and make findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Trial Court so ruled following similar rulings made by the Circuit Courts of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, the Sixth Circuit and the Ninth Circuit. It refused to follow two decisions both from the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. It is submitted that the Trial Court correctly acted in this action. Therefore this ruling presents no substantial question.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF FOR THE CELOTEX CORPORATION

I

Preliminary Statement

This supplemental brief is submitted on behalf of appellee, The Celotex Corporation, and is in addition to the general brief submitted on behalf of all appellees, including

The Celotex Corporation. This supplemental brief is not intended to duplicate any of the matters included in such general brief, to which this appellee subscribes without reservation; it will be limited to matters pertaining particularly to this appellee. To avoid unnecessary duplication, the reference to the opinion below and the statement of jurisdiction contained in such general appellees' brief are adopted to the extent that the same may be necesary.

II

Statement

The Celotex Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Celotex) entered the gypsum industry for the first time in 1939 when it acquired the assets of The American Gypsum Company (hereinafter referred to as American) (Fdg. 15, R. 4141; Govt. Br., pp. 11-12). In order to acquire such assets Celotex was required to take over the license which had been entered into by American with United States Gypsum Company (hereinafter referred to as USG), dated November 25, 1929 (Govt. Ex. 13, R. 4446, 4455). The terms of said license expressly obligated American to secure such assumption by a successor to its assets and business, and, accordingly, such license was acquired by Celotex on April 12, 1939, as a part of the assets of American (Govt. Ex. 14, R. 4469). At the same time, Celotex also took over as a part of the assets of American, American's license from USG, dated December 4, 1934, relating to metallized board (Fdg. 16, R. 4142).

In its answer Celotex admits that from April 12, 1939, to the date of the filing of the complaint herein (August 15, 1940) "U. S. G. has determined and fixed the minimum selling prices and terms and conditions of sale of this defendant as its licensee for all gypsum board manufactured by this defendant as its licensee under patents owned by U. S. G. and which this defendant was licensed to utilize," and that throughout such period this appellee "has sold all gypsum board manufactured by it at the prices and on the terms and conditions of sale determined and fixed by U. S. G. as aforesaid" (R. 206). Other than as summed up in the foregoing statements, the record contains no reference to any activities of Celotex, its officers, agents, or employees.

Appellant admits that "In the nature of the case, Celotex had no part in the early negotiations" (Govt. Br., p. 89). This is manifestly true, since Celotex did not enter the gypsum industry until April, 1939.

Certain additional statements at the same page regarding this appellee, however, contain inaccuracies. The record does not supoprt appellant's statement that C. F. Miller continued as Manager of the American Gypsum Division of Celotex after April 12, 1939. The evidence is that C. F. Miller continued with the American Gypsum Division of Celotex until July, 1940, but the record is completely silent as to the capacity in which he was employed or the title, if any, which he had (R. 1374). The admission by Celotex in its answer, referred to by appellant, that USG entered into similar agreements (similar to USG's license to American, dated Nov. 25, 1929) "with National, Universal, Atlantic, Ebsary and Certain-teed" speaks only as of the time of the filing of this appellee's answer, July 31, 1941 (R. 214), and does not admit or imply knowledge of such similarity as of any period prior to the time Celotex was required to prepare and file its answer in these proceedings, or knowledge by it at any time of any negotiations leading up to the issuance of these licenses.

III

Summary of Argument

Celotex entered the gypsum business for the first time in 1939. There is no showing that Celotex was in combination, lawful or unlawful, with any other person or company in the gypsum industry, or had any connection with any other person or company in such industry except for the licenses which it acquired to use certain patents owned by USG and its operations thereunder. There is a complete lack of evidence of any knowing participation in a plan, combination or conspiracy, if any there was.

Argument

The argument on behalf of Celotex should not be understood as admitting directly, or by inference, the existence of any plan, combination, or conspiracy in the gypsum industry as alleged by appellant. The Court below determined that there was no such conspiracy or combination, and its conclusions (R. 4167-68) are fully supported by the evidence as shown in the general brief filed on behalf of all the appellees which this appellee has subscribed and adopts in full. However, since under the first point of its brief (Govt. Br., p. 171) appellant insists that there was an unlawful conspiracy to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices by means of patent license agreements, this appellee desires to point out to the Court that there is no evidence with respect to it which will support a conclusion that it was a party to any plan, combination or conspiracy, if any there was.

1. Celotex had no part in any transaction relied upon by the Government.

In the Government brief, counsel painstakingly review in great detail various transactions, including many letters, memoranda, and other exhibits, conversations, meetings, and activities over a long period beginning in 1925. Presumably this recital includes all the evidence relied upon by them to support their contention that there was a conspiracy or combination by erstwhile competitors to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices therein by means of common price-fixing license agreements.

Under Part III of the Statement, entitled "The Conspiracy" (Govt. Br., pp. 16-102), they review the matters which they contend show the conspiracy. Part III in turn is subdivided into seven parts, the first four being entitled respectively "The conspiracy in 1925-1926," "The conspiracy in 1927," "The conspiracy in 1928," and "The conspiracy in 1929." There is not even a reference to Celotex in any of the many transactions and detailed matters referred to under said headings, and obviously so, for, as conceded by the Government, Celotex did not even enter the gypsum industry until 1939, ten years after the latest alleged conspiracy (Govt. Br., pp. 11-12), and "In the nature of the case, Celotex had no part in the early negotiations" (Govt. Br., p. 89).

Subdivision E of Part III of the Statement (Govt. Br., pp. 88-89) is entitled "Concerning Texas, Newark, and Celotex"; but the Government there points out no evidence whatsoever of any negotiations, transactions or other action by Celotex subsequent to April 12, 1939, when Celotex first entered the industry, other than the admission by Celotex that its licensor, USG, determined and fixed minimum prices and terms and conditions of sale of Celotex as licensee.

Appellant sets forth only a part of this admission, but the full text is included in its Statement (supra, pp. 2-3).

In subdivision F under Part III of the Statement, entitled "The Metallized Board Licenses" (Govt. Br., pp. 90-94), the only reference to Celotex is that under date of April 12, 1939, it assumed the metallized board license from USG to American (Govt. Br., p. 94). There is no reference to any transaction or any action taken by Celotex subsequent to April 12, 1939.

And in the last subdivision in Part III, entitled "The Perforated Lath Licenses" (Govt. Br., pp. 94-102), the sole statement concerning Celotex is that it did not assume the perforated lath license between USG and American (Govt. Br., p. 101).

Under Part IV of the Statement (Govt. Br., pp. 102-160) counsel review at great length the evidence in the record which they contend shows the operation and effect of the claimed conspiracy. For the reasons stated in appellees' general brief, to which, as previously stated, we fully subscribe, we do not believe that the portions of the evidence assembled and presented by appellant in Parts III and IV of its Statement show that any conspiracy, plan or combination to organize the gypsum industry and to stabilize prices therein ever existed at any time. A fortiori, there could be no operation and effect of a non-existent conspiracy.

Additionally, however, we wish to call the Court's attention in this supplemental brief to the fact that in all of the detailed review of such evidence in Part IV of appellant's Statement, there is not a single reference to any act by Celotex, or to any transaction in which it is said Celotex participated, with the single possible exception that it is therein indicated that the last price bulletin issued by USG in evidence is dated June 10, 1939 (and Celotex affirms that it sold at bulletin prices in this period).

Thus, in the entire resume of the portions of the record upon which the Government relies to support its contention that a conspiracy or combination to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices therein was formed or existed, the only statements as to action or conduct on the part of Celotex are: (1) that on April 12, 1939, Celotex entered the gypsum business by acquiring the assets of American, among which was the general license, dated November 25, 1929, from USG to American, and the metallized board license from USG to American, dated December 4, 1934; and (2) that following the acquisition of the assets of American, USG determined and fixed the minimum selling prices and terms and conditions of sale of Celotex as the licensee of USG. It is clearly apparent that there has been no showing by the Government that Celotex ever was in combination with any other person in the gypsum industry. On the contrary, the only evidence of a connection which Celotex had, after its entry into the gypsum business, with any other person or company in the gypsum industry was the licensor-licensee relationship between Celotex and USG. Thus, there is a complete lack of proof of connection between Celotex and any other licensee in the industry. Lacking such proof, the Government cannot successfully maintain that Celotex participated in any combination or conspiracy among "appellees," if any there was.

2. No evidence of any knowing participation by Celotex in any plan, combination or conspiracy, if any there was.

Recognizing the complete absence of any evidence of any conduct by Celotex in either the formation of the claimed conspiracy or plan, or in any of the claimed operations thereunder, at least until after April 12, 1939, the Government apparently predicates its claim for relief against Celotex upon the theory that Celotex is claimed to have joined and participated in the alleged conspiracy, plan or combination at that date, with knowledge thereof.

At pages 206-207 of their brief, counsel admit that acquaintance with the alleged "plan" prior to adherence thereto is a prerequisite in order to include as conspirators parties who subsequently adhere to the "plan". But the evidence relied upon by the Government as a basis for obtaining injunctive relief against Celotex falls far short of meeting this agreed test. As was shown in the preceding point, such evidence does not include a single act of "participation" on the part of Celotex subsequent to its entry into the gypsum business on April 12, 1939, with the single exception that subsequent to said date, as admitted in its answer, Celotex has observed the prices and terms and conditions of sale fixed by USG for gypsum products manufactured by Celotex as its licensee and incorporating inventions covered by some or all of the patents included in said licenses (R. 206).

The principal evidence claimed by the Government (Br., p. 89) to impute to Celotex knowledge of the claimed conspiracy or plan is that C. F. Miller, manager of American, continued as manager of the American Gypsum Division of Celotex, subsequent to April 12, 1939; and that the same Miller met with Avery in the early negotiations between American and USG and was fully conversant with the purpose, scope and effect of the licensing arrangement. As pointed out in our Statement (supra, p. 3), the record does not show that C. F. Miller continued or ever was manager of the American Gypsum Division of Celotex. The record is completely silent as to the capacity in which Miller continued with Celotex between April 12, 1939, and July, 1940. In the absence of any such evidence, no claim can successfully be made that any knowledge on the part of Miller can be imputed to Celotex.

The tenuous nature of appellant's argument is best demonstrated by an examination of Exhibit 310 (R. 5859), relied upon by the Government to sustain its assertions concerning the knowledge of C. F. Miller. This exhibit is wholly inadequate for such purpose. It is merely a letter by Miller, dated September 16, 1926, reporting on a conference had by Miller and other representatives of American with Avery and other representatives of USG, concerning a proposed settlement of the patent infringement litigation brought by USG against American. The settlement proposal was refused and American decided to go ahead and fight the litigation, which it did (R. 1378, 1380). It was not until November 25, 1929, after having lost the infringement litigation (R. 1380), that American took a license from USG (Gov. Ex. 13, R. 4446). At most, this exhibit portrays only one step in unsuccessful negotiations to settle patent litigation then pending between the two corporations.

Also in its effort to show knowledge of the claimed conspiracy on the part of Celotex at the time it entered the gypsum industry, the Government refers to portions of two admissions contained in the answer filed by Celotex (Govt. Br., p. 89). The first is an admission by Celotex that USG entered into agreements with National, Universal, Atlantic, Ebsary and Certain-teed. Reference to Paragraph 85 of said answer (R. 204) shows that the agreements referred to were licenses similar to the license agreement between USG and American, dated November 25, 1929. This admission, however, speaks only as of the date of the answer from which it has been extracted and is wholly insufficient to establish knowledge of such matters on the part of Celotex at any time prior to such answer.

Moreover, even assuming knowledge on the part of Celotex as of April 12, 1939, that other licensees had received from USG license agreements similar to that acquired by Celotex from American, such knowledge is totally insufficient to show knowledge by Celotex of the existence of the claimed conspiracy, plan or combination asserted and charged by the Government in this case. It must always be remembered that the charges in this case, as stated under Point I of the Argument in the Government's brief (pp. 171-218), relate to a claimed conspiracy between erstwhile competitors to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices therein and to use the common price-fixing license agreements as a means of effectuating such conspiracy. The conspiracy alleged by the Government is understood to relate to understandings and transactions outside of, and part from, the license agreements. A mere showing of the existence of numerous similar license agreements would not sustain the Government's position, and, similarly, an admission that licenses were held by others fails to establish any knowledge of or acquaintance with the claimed conspiracy.

The other admission in the Celotex answer referred to is that from 1939 to the date of the complaint, USG has determined and fixed the minimum selling prices and terms and conditions of sale of Celotex as the licensee of USG. As shown in the Statement in this brief (supra, pp. 2-3), the portion quoted by the Government is incomplete. The record is that this appellee, subsequent to April 12, 1939, has sold board manufactured by it under the patents covered by the license at prices fixed by its licensor, USG. Such mere compliance with the terms and provisions of the license agreement, without which it could not have manufactured these products, has no conceivable bearing on the question of whether or not Celotex had knowledge of the claimed conspiracy, plan or combination sought to be established by the Government in this case or of any of the facts and circumstances reviewed and relied upon by the Government in its brief.

It is fundamental that, as stated by this Court, "Those having no knowledge of the conspiracy are not conspirators". U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U.S. 205, 210.

There is no distinction in this connection between persons acting at the time an alleged conspiracy was formed or persons whose connection with the alleged conspiracy or alleged conspirators occurs at a later date. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit well stated and applied this rule in Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lumber Co., 117 F. (2d) 53 (1941), where it cited this Court's decision in Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. U.S., 306 U.S. 208, and said (p. 62):

> "As to some of these defendants there were other reasonable explanations, bu' liability on their part could only result from a knowing participation in the combination of retail dealers. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra. There is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, showing such knowledge. It was not enough to establish a cause of action against them to show that there was a conspiracy among the lumber dealers to prevent plaintiffs from securing supplies sold by this group of defendants, in the absence of evidence that these defendants knew there was such a conspiracy. They refused to sell plaintiffs because they feared such act would displease their other customers, causing loss of their business. They perhaps knew that other suppliers were refusing presumably for like reasons."

The foregoing ruling is singularly apt. We perceive nothing in this Court's subsequent opinion in U.S. v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U.S. 265, which precludes its application here.

Conclusion

It is, we believe, established beyond question that there was no conspiracy, plan or combination in the gypsum industry of the nature alleged by appellant here. The Court below found no evidence of such a conspiracy or combination and its determinations are fully sustained by the record. The judgment based upon these findings was a dismissal of the complaint as to all defendants. It is submitted that the judgment of the Court below should be sustained. Furthermore, the judgment of the Court below should be sustained as to this appellee for the additional reason hereinabove set forth.

No. 13

BRIEF FOR APPELLEES

Opinions Below

The opinion of the three-judge District Court dismissing the case on the merits at the close of the Government's evidence is reported in 67 F. Supp. 397. The opinion of the District Court on the matter of patent validity is reported in 53 F. Supp. 889.

Jurisdiction

This is a civil anti-trust action brought August 15, 1940, by the United States pursuant to Section 4 of the Sherman

Act, to restrain defendants from alleged violations of Section 1, 2 and 3 of said Act.[1] The action was tried and most of the preliminary proceedings were heard by a three-judge court which was constituted on September 15, 1942, after the Government had filed a certificate under the Expediting Act.[2]

The final judgment of the three-judge District Court dismissing the Government's complaint on the merits was entered on August 5, 1946 (R. 4169). A petition for appeal was filed and allowed on September 30, 1946 (R. 4187, 4188). Probable jurisdiction was noted on December 16, 1946 (R. 4204).

Jurisdiction is conferred on this Court by Section 2 of the Expediting Act[3] and Section 238 of the Judicial Code.[4]

Statutes Involved

The material parts of Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the Sherman Act are:

The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1-7 and 15 of this title; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. * * * July 2, 1890, c. 647, §4, 26 Stat. 209; Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, §291, 36 Stat. 1167."

STATEMENT OF CASE.

The Issue

The main issue upon the appeal is whether a patent owner will continue to be permitted to grant a license to another to make, use and sell a patented article and to impose a restriction upon his licensee against underselling him in respect of the patented product made and sold under the license; in short, whether the General Electric case[5] should be sustained or overruled.

This is the basic question in the case. The Government seeks to avoid a clear-cut consideration of the question by attempting to distinguish the General Electric case. To the extent that the attempted distinction involves legal principles, we shall argue that it is unsound. To the extent that it involves factual matters, we shall show that it is based upon a presentation of the case in terms of what the Government charged but failed to prove upon the trial. The discussion of alleged facts in the Government's brief is in shocking disregard of the Trial Court's findings of fact all of which were well supported, indeed compelled, by the evidence. The result is to present the Court with a distorted, misleading and inaccurate view of the case. It is necessary therefore for appellees to restate the case in this brief. Further consideration of the Government's discussion of alleged facts appears in Point IV.

In addition, the Government's brief raises some incidental points on procedure, burden of proof, the declarations rule, and the right of the Government to review in an anti-trust action determinations of the Patent Office on matters of patent validity. These questions are considered in Points III and V of this brief.

The Defendants

The defendant companies in this case comprise the members of the gypsum manufacturing industry of the United [5] United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476 (1926).

States in the area east of the Rocky Mountains.[6] They are: United States Gypsum Company, National Gypsum Company, Certain-teed Products Corporation, The Celotex Corporation, Ebsary Gypsum Company, Inc., and Newark Plaster Company, all of which are corporations, and Texas Cement Plaster Company, which is the name under which Samuel M. Gloyd was doing business as an individual. These companies are hereinafter referred to respectively as USG, National, Certain-teed, Celotex, Ebsary, Newark and Texas. Besides Gloyd, the individual defendants are the chief executive officers of the defendant companies. As of the time when the suit was filed Sewell L. Avery was chairman of the Board of Directors of USG, Oliver M. Knode, president of USG, Melvin H. Baker, president of National, Bror G. Dahlberg, president of Celotex and chairman of the Board of Directors of Certain-teed,[7] Henry J. Hartley, president of Certain-teed, Frederick G. Ebsary, president of Ebsary and Frederick Tomkins, president of Newark.

Gypsum Products[8]

The defendant companies are engaged in the mining of gypsum and in the manufacture and sale of products made from it, gypsum board, gypsum plaster, block, tile and Keene's cement.

Gypsum is a mineral consisting of hydrous calcium sulphate. It has rock-like qualities useful in building construction and is found in large deposits in many states throughout the United States.

Gypsum rock is mined and then subjected to calcination —the process of driving off the water of crystallization by heating. The resultant calcined gypsum or stucco is the substance familiarly known as plaster of paris. It has the property of readily recombining with water and resuming its former content of water of crystallization and its original rock-like properties.

Gypsum plaster consists largely of calcined gypsum which is treated and supplemented with other materials to give greater strength, control its set, and impart other desirable qualities. Keene's cement is a highly refined type of gypsum plaster. Block and tile are, as their names suggest, articles of gypsum which are cast in the form of blocks or tile.

The most important gypsum product is gypsum board. It consists of two outer sheets of heavy tough paper, front and back, called "liners," between which there is a lightened gypsum core which is firmly bonded to the paper. Gypsum wallboard is a product used as a finished interior wall. Gypsum lath or plasterboard is a product used as a base to which a coat of plaster may be applied. The term board as herein used includes wallboard and lath or plasterboard.

Patents[9]

Prior to 1912, gypsum board was a rough, crude product. It was made by hand by pouring buckets of calcined gypsum mixed with water in thin layers between multiple pieces of rough felt paper and smoothing the product with rollers. After the gypsum had set, the pieces of board were trimmed to size and dried out by stacking in the open air under sheds. In 1912, USG commenced the development of more satisfactory products and more efficient methods of manufacture. These developments were covered by patents—product, process and machine—owned by USG. Among the more important patents were the following:

Closed edge board, Utzman Patent No. 1,034,746 (R. 35-38). When gypsum board was made with rough, exposed edges, great waste was attendant upon the trimming operations of manufacture and even greater waste resulted from the crumbling of the edges and the core in transit and use. The invention of closed edge board, i.e., board having the liners folded over so as to enclose the edge, solved this problem. When the closed-edge board of the Utzman Patent came on the market, open-edge board was largely displaced under the demand of the trade for the better product.

Board making machine, Utzman Patent No. 1,330,413. A machine was developed for mixing the gypsum slurry and distributing it between paper liners and forming the closed-edge board in a continuous operation. The use of this patented machine was essential in the manufacture of closed-edge board.

Board containing starch, Haggerty Patent No. 1,500,542 (R. 64-69). The strength of gypsum board is due in large part to the lateral tensile strength of the paper liners. This strength is dependent upon the degree of bond which exists between gypsum core and liners. For many years difficulty had been experienced when the bond between core and liners broke down causing "peelers". This difficulty became more pronounced with the development of high speed manufacture and the use of high temperatures in kilns where the board was dried. It was discovered that board containing stareh or cooked carbohydrate in the core would insure a good bond between core and liners. Gypsum board embodying this discovery was the subject of the Haggerty Patent.

Foam or Bubble Board, Roos Patents Nos. 2,017,022, 2,079,338 and 2,080,009 (R. 100-114). From the beginning gypsum board manufacturers incorporated a so-called "aggregate" in the gypsum core, usually sawdust, to lighten the board, give greater strength and resiliency, and improve nailing and sawing qualities. The quality of sawdust varied and later it became scarce and expensive. The Roos foam or bubble board patents took care of this situation. They covered gypsum board with a core of cellular structure produced by employing foam or a foaming agent in the gypsum mix during the course of manufacture. Board made with a foam "aggregate" not only did away with the sawdust problems but also was stronger, less brittle to saw and nail, dried more quickly, and was lighter in weight. This last factor resulted in a substantial saving of freight charges which constituted an important item on this heavy, bulky product of comparatively low cost.

Board bundle, Utzman Patents Nos. 1,696,877 and 1,724,740, and Birdsey Patents Nos. 1,730,113 and 1,946,056. Due to the nature of the product, gypsum board is difficult to package or bundle. For many years most manufacturers bundled board with wire but this method was unsatisfactory since the wire would slip and frequently it would cut into the board causing cracks and breakage. These disadvantages were obviated through the development of a bundle formed by affixing strips of tape around the edges of a suitable number of pieces to form a tight, manageable package.

Metallized board, Roos Patent No. 1,914,345. In the early '30s, gypsum board was confronted with competition from other products which possessed insulation characteristics. This resulted in the invention of metallized gypsum board consisting of board with metallic foil to furnish insulation covered by this and other patent rights owned by USG.

Perforated lath, Roos Patent No. 1,938,354. In many localities, particularly in metropolitan areas, there are building code requirements providing that a wall structure consisting of a plaster base such as gypsum lath plus the applied coat of plaster must withstand a one hour fire test. Ordinary gypsum lath will not pass this test since the gypsum plaster and core calcine and crumble in the face of prolonged application of fire. A perforated lath was developed containing holes of such size and spacing as to permit a wall structure composed of it to withstand the one hour test. When plaster is applied to this type of lath some of it passes through the perforations to form a mechanical key which, because of the size and spacing of the holes, supports the coat of plaster with the result that it will resist fire for an hour. This type of gypsum lath was the first to pass the one hour fire test of the United States Bureau of Standards and to receive the Bureau's one hour fire rating.

Patent Litigation and Licenses[10]

As stated, the developments above described, as well as many others of lesser importance, were covered by patents owned by USG. A demand arose in the trade for these improved products and companies other than USG commenced to copy them. There ensued many years of litigation in which USG strove to enforce and eventually succeeded in enforcing its patent rights.

Prior to 1917 the Bestwall Manufacturing Company (Bestwall) commenced the manufacture of closed-edge board. USG sued for infringement and won. Bestwall Mfg. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co., 270 Fed. 542 (C. C. A. 7th, 1921), cert. denied, 263 U. S. 713 (1923). Bestwall had, however, in the course of the litigation, been acquired by The Beaver Products Company, Inc. (Beaver), and USG by a supplemental bill sued both of these companies for infringement and again prevailed. United States Gypsum Co. v. Bestwall Mfg. Co., 15 F. (2d) 704 (N. D. Ill. 1925). These decisions made the manufacture of closed-edge board by a competitor of USG impossible without infringement of USG's patent rights.[11] Prior to the last mentioned decision, Augustus S. Blagden, president of Beaver, made overtures of settlement to Sewell L. Avery, president of USG; he continued these efforts after the decree under the supplemental bill. Avery, at a meeting with Blagden in December, 1925, specified as terms of settlement the payment of damages by Beaver for infringement of USG's patents, acknowledgment by Beaver of the validity of USG's patents, payment of royalties, and the right in USG to fix prices of gypsum board made and sold by Beaver under the Utzman closed-edge patent. A settlement agreement was executed on July 29, 1926, Beaver paying $250,000 cash damages and USG granting Beaver a license to make, use and sell the patented products, to use the patented processes and to make and use the patented machines (FF. 6, R. 4134-4135).

In September, 1925, after the decision against Beaver, USG sued The American Gypsum Company (American) and the Universal Gypsum and Lime Company (Universal) for infringement, and served a notice of infringement upon the Niagara Gypsum Company (Niagara). On September 17, 1926, a settlement and license agreement was entered into with Universal similar to that with Beaver, except that the lump sum payment was approximately $35,000. A license agreement was entered into between USG and the Atlantic Gypsum Products Company (Atlantic) on March 5, 1927. In this instance no damages were paid, Atlantic not having previously made gypsum board. Texas signed a license agreement on April 11, 1927, under similar circumstances (FF. 7, R. 4135).

In 1923 Certain-teed, originally a manufacturer of roofing products, entered the gypsum industry with the acquisition of the Acme Cement Plaster Company (Acme). In 1926 it commenced the manufacture of open-edge gypsum board at the former Acme plant in Texas. On January 20, 1928, it purchased the assets of Beaver. Beaver was then making a closed-edge board under its license with USG. Certain-teed refused to assume the Beaver-USG settlement agreement and license. USG thereupon, on or about February 21, 1928, instituted suit in the District Court of the United States in Illinois against Certain-teed and Beaver, seeking an injunction against the distribution of the proceeds of sale to the Beaver stockholders and asserting that Certain-teed should be required to assume all liabilities of Beaver under its settlement agreement and license. Certain-teed was required to put up a million dollar bond, or otherwise to suffer a temporary injunction, as security for damages which might be found due to USG. On May 22, 1929, Certain-teed settled this suit with USG, agreeing to pay damages of approximately $64,000 and to fulfill the obligations of Beaver under its original settlement agreement and license; USG executed in Certain-teed's favor a patent license agreement and the suit was dismissed and the bond released (FF. 9, R. 4136).

On May 16, 1929, National settled two patent infringement suits which USG had brought against it, one on November 5, 1926, the other on May 7, 1928, paying on account of damages for past infringement approximately $178,000 and entering into a patent license agreement with USG (FF. 9, R. 4137).

Ebsary, which had commenced making open-edge gypsum board in 1928, was granted a patent license by USG on May 22, 1929. This license was not a part of settlement of an infringement claim, since Ebsary had not manufactured closed-edge board and there was no infringement suit or basis therefor against it (FF. 9, R. 4137).

Niagara commenced making an open-edge gypsum board, but later made board with a semi-protected edge covered by a Clark application for a patent owned by American. This board had been developed by American in an attempt to compete with USG's closed-edge board.

USG claimed that this board infringed its Birdsey patent No. 1,358,508 covering the manufacture of board with a partially closed edge. Priority over the Clark application had been awarded Birdsey by the Commissioner of Patents; this was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in 1926. Clark v. Birdsey, 56 App. D. C. 136, 10 F. (2d) 1001. A contract of settlement was entered into between Niagara in May, 1929, providing for the payment of damages of approximately $28,000 and for a patent license to Niagara. (FF. 9, R. 4137).

In 1929 USG had pending applications for the three Roos patents covering foam or "bubble" board. These applications were in interference with an application for a patent by Erick Christian Bayer, a foreign patentee, the American rights to whose patent had been acquired by USG. The Roos applications prevailed in the interference proceeding and Roos patents Nos. 2,017,022, 2,079,338, and 2,080,009 were ultimately issued to USG on October 8, 1935, May 4, 1937, and May 11, 1937, respectively.

On May 23, 1929, after the last of the May 1929 license agreements had been executed, Avery of USG described the scope and nature of the Roos bubble board invention, which had just been put into use by USG with satisfactory results after earlier experimentation. Avery outlined its advantages including weight reduction, lower freight cost, elimination of the sawdust problem, easier handling and quicker drying, and stated that if the various licensees were interested he would be willing to grant them licenses on this invention. Following this the licensees did investigate the merits of the Roos bubble board invention and expressed their interest in the matter. In June and July, 1929, negotiations were going on between USG and its various licensees in respect of a license covering the bubble board invention, and a form of license agreement on that invention had been offered to them. (FF. 11, 12; R. 4138-4139).

About this time, Universal through its president and co-receiver, Eugene Holland, complained to Avery that USG, by using starch in its board to obtain adhesion between the core and paper liners, was infringing two patents owned by Universal known as the Haggerty and Hite patents Nos. 1,500,452 and 1,230,297, respectively. As we have stated, the Haggerty patent covered gypsum board employing starch or a cooked carbohydrate in the core of the board to insure a good bond between the core and the paper covering sheets. This had solved the "peeler" trouble in the gypsum board industry and made possible modern high speed production of gypsum board. Without it, high temperatures used to expedite drying of the board would result in defective board. The Hite patent covered a heat insulating material and method of making the same. In 1927 Universal had brought suit in the United States District Court in Buffalo, New York, against National for infringment of the Haggerty patent, demanding an injunction and an accounting, and the court had ruled that the Haggerty patent was valid and infringed (Universal Gypsum & Lime Co. v. Haggerty, 21 F. (2d) 544 (W. D. N. Y. 1927)), and National had posted a substantial bond rather than suffer enforcement of a temporary injunction. (FF. 12, R. 4138-4139).

Avery told Holland that it was not USG's policy to infringe patent rights and that he would investigate the claim. Holland continued to discuss with Avery separately the matter of the alleged infringement of the Haggerty and Hite starch patents. As a result of these discussions, USG agreed to purchase and did purchase these patents (FF. 12, R. 4139).

In August 1929, USG announced its arrangement to purchase the Haggerty and Hite patents and offered all of its licensees new licenses which would replace the prior license contracts and include in one document the outstanding patents of the earlier licenses, the Haggerty and Hite patents, and the applications for patents on the Roos bubble board invention. This offer was made subject to the approval of the District Courts hereinafter referred to (FF. 12, R. 4139-4140).

Pursuant to this offer, Niagara on October 8, 1929, Certain-teed on the 15th, National on the 17th, Ebsary on the 18th, and Atlantic on the 21st entered into new patent license contracts with USG which superseded the previous agreements between these companies and USG, and which covered the Haggerty and Hite patents and also the anticipated patents under the Roos and Bayer applications, as well as the unexpired patents of the earlier contracts (FF. 13, R. 4140).

The sale of the Haggerty and Hite patents by Universal to USG was consummated in a contract of November 5, 1929, which also settled a claim of USG against Universal for infringement of USG's partially closed edge patent and the claim of Universal against USG for infringement of the Haggerty and Hite patents, and which gave Universal a license superseding the 1926 license agreement between USG and Universal. Universal was in receivership and the sale was a favorable one from its standpoint because it provided Universal with substantial funds, permitting it to reorganize and emerge from receivership with its accounts paid. The original and ancillary receivership proceedings were in seven different Federal District Courts and the sale was approved by all of these courts on or about November 5, 1929 (FF. 12, R. 4138-4139).

As mentioned above, USG had in September, 1925, instituted a suit against American for infringement of USG's closed-edge patent. It had also in the same month commenced a suit against American for infringement of the Birdsey patent on partially closed-edge board. American attempted to obtain a more favorable settlement than had been offered to other infringers. USG's infringement suit with respect to the Birdsey patent had been postponed pending settlement negotiations, reinstated, and ultimately tried and decided in favor of USG. Settlement discussions by American were resumed, with renewed efforts to obtain concessions from USG. On November 25, 1929, American finally settled its outstanding litigation with USG on the terms originally offered, i.e., on terms similar to those of the earlier settlements with other companies, and accepted a license from USG similar to the license contracts of the other licensees. American paid in settlement of past infringement approximately $152,000. On April 23, 1930, Kelley Plasterboard Company, Inc. (Kelley) took a similar license. On January 3, 1939, USG consented to the assignment of this license to Newark. Texas did not enter into a license contract in 1929, but continued as a licensee under its license of April 11, 1927, although it was not subject to price control after August 6, 1929, the date of the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent, and no effort was made by any defendant or any agent of any defendant to establish or control the price at which Texas sold gypsum board during the period from August 6, 1929, until February 10, 1937, at which time its license of April 11, 1927, expired and Texas accepted a further license contract similar in form to the November, 1929, contract with the other licensees (FF. 14, R. 4140).

Niagara was acquired by USG in 1929. National acquired Universal in 1935 and Atlantic in 1936. Newark acquired the stock of Kelley in 1937 and merged with Kelley in 1939. Celotex entered the gypsum industry for the first time when it acquired the assets of American in 1939. Upon acquiring these companies respectively National, Newark and Celotex took over the above-mentioned licenses which had been entered into by Universal, Atlantic, Kelley and American with USG (FF. 15, R. 4141).

The foregoing outlines the circumstances surrounding the signing of the main patent licenses involved in this suit.

The companies which became licensees did so because they desired to settle or avoid litigation and to obtain the right to use USG's patents, considering it a business necessity to be able to do so. Several of the licensees had made the closed-edge board before they acquired the right to do so from USG, for which infringement of the Utzman patent they paid substantial damages. Also some of the licensees had manufactured board containing starch, which was covered by the Haggerty patent. Numerous other patents included in the licenses were essential to the manufacturing of modern gypsum board (FF. 36, R. 4149).

Under each license royalties were paid and USG reserved the right to establish the minimum prices of patented gypsum board made and sold by each licensee thereunder. ith the limitation that the minimum prices would not be more than those of USG to its own trade in the same market. Under the earlier licenses, price control was limited to gypsum board made under the Utzman closed-edge patent, and such control terminated at the expiration of that patent on August 6, 1929, although such licenses were to continue until February 10, 1937, the date of the expiration of the Utzman machine patent (FF. 8, 10, R. 4135-4137). Under the later licenses, price control was operative only with respect to gypsum board made under product patents such as the Haggerty starch patent or, when issued, the Roos "bubble board" or foam patents (R. 4405).

From time to time minimum price bulletins were sent out by USG to its licensees under the various license contracts. The price bulletins were at all times limited in their application to patented board manufactured and sold by each licensee under its license. The price on board was calculated on the basis of a mill price plus freight from the nearest mill (freight-wise) to the point of destination. The bulletins provided for prices on various quantities of board such as carloads, less than carloads and truckloads. In particular markets, such as metropolitan areas, where it was economic to deliver gypsum board in truckload quantities, prices were established for such quantities and the areas in which such prices were to apply were defined. Outside of such areas a higher price was fixed. Provision was made in various instances for a variation in price to cover pool car shipments, railroad switching charges, and "pick-ups" at a mill (FF. 18, R. 4143).

The bulletins also contained provisions purposed to prevent the violation of the minimum price requirements through such devices, in connection with a sale of patented board, as the giving away of board as "dunnage", making advertisement allowances to the customer, granting fictitious damage claims, splitting commissions with the customer by commission salesmen, paying unearned warehousing charges, fictitious hiring of customers' trucks, giving away plaster or other products, or the sale of such products at a price unusually below the licensees' prevailing market price (FF. 18, R. 4143).

During the periods when price bulletins were sent out by USG to its licensees, each licensee, in the main, sold gypsum board manufactured by it at the prices and upon the terms and conditions stated in the bulletins. No bulletins have been sent out since July 8, 1941 (FF. 19, R. 4143).

In 1932 USG set up as a department a wholly owned corporation called the Board Survey Company. Its function was to receive complaints of license violations, to investigate the facts, call them to the attention of the licensee involved, and upon occasion to the attention of the licensor USG. Board Survey Company was organized by USG for the purpose of bringing about compliance with the licenses. The licensees had no part in its formation, management, or operation. From time to time a representative of USG, as licensor, met with representatives of the licensee companies for the purpose of explaining to them the provisions of the minimum price bulletins and for the purpose of securing adherence to such minimum prices by the licensees (FF. 20, R. 4143-4144).

In addition to the main board license agreements, certain additional contracts relating to metallized board and perforated lath were executed.

At various times in 1934-1935 USG as owner of Roos Patent 1,914,345 and other patent rights covering the use of metallic foil as a thermal insulating element in board granted licenses to other companies. National executed such a license on October 5, 1934, Kelley on October 12, 1934 (USG on January 3, 1939, consented to the assignment of this contract to Newark), Certain-teed on November 2, 1934, Atlantic on November 30, 1934, American on December 4, 1934 (assigned to Celotex on April 12, 1939), Universal on April 4, 1935 and Ebsary on August 14, 1935. In these contracts USG granted licenses to make, use and sell board having a metallized surface embodying the inventions disclosed and claimed in the patents and patent applications covered by the contracts, and reserved the right to fix the minimum prices on board embodying the inventions in question, but at not more than USG's own price in the same market (FF. 16, R. 4141-4142).

Similarly, USG was the owner of Roos Patent No. 1,938,354 covering a fire resistant gypsum board referred to above as perforated lath. USG granted licenses to Certain-teed on June 8, 1936, American on July 10, 1936, Ebsary on February 2, 1937 and Kelley on June 23, 1937, for the manufacture, use and sale of this lath. The terms of these licenses were substantially similar to those of the metallized board license contracts. Later USG offered a revised perforated lath license to licensees, royalty free, i.e., extended an offer to include the perforated lath patent in the main board license agreement at no additional royalty. Such revised licenses were accepted by Certainteed, Ebsary and Kelley. On January 3, 1939, USG granted Newark, which had merged with Kelley, a royalty free perforated lath license, at the same time canceling the Kelley revised license (FF. 17, R. 4142-4143).

The Government's Charges and Their Disposition by the Court Below

The Government charged that the license agreements entered into between USG as licensor and the other defendants as licensees are not within the rule of the General Electric case[12] and are therefore illegal restraints of trade.

The Trial Court held that there is no substantial distinction between the instant case and the General Electric case: (a) in respect of the nature of the patents which underlie the license agreements; (b) in the fact that here a number of licenses with price control provisions were executed; and (c) in respect of the terms and conditions of the license agreements and price bulletins. As to (a), the Trial Court held that the patents here, although on different materials, are of similar character and bear a similar relationship to the industry and the development thereof as in the General Electric case. The patents principally involved in the instant case cover as completely the patented product as those principally involved in the General Electric case (FF. 25, R. 4146). As to (b) the Trial Court ruled that a patentee does not enlarge his patent monopoly by licensing a plurality of licensees (Conclusions of Law 2, 3, R. 4167). As to (c) the Trial Court held that the terms and conditions of the license agreements and price bulletins in the instant case as compared with the terms and conditions, including price provisions, in the General Electric case, disclose no material distinction. If there is any difference between the two, it is in the greater stringency and complexity of those in the General Electric case (FF. 27, R. 4147).

The Government charged that the license contracts, even if valid on their face, were not bona fide but were executed by defendants merely to give color of legality to a combination to restrain trade in gypsum products. The Trial Court found that the Government failed to establish that the agreements were not made in good faith or were intended only as sham agreements to disguise illegal purposes. On the contrary, it affirmatively found that the license agreements were executed as bona fide agreements and were intended to bind each party to the promises made therein and were not sham agreements executed to disguise illegal purposes (FF. 30, R. 4148). The Trial Court specifically found that the license agreements were executed upon the faith of the General Electric and Bement[13] cases (FF. 31, R. 4148), that the licensees paid substantial damages for past infringement of patents and substantial royalties under the licenses (FF. 32, R. 4148), that USG insisted upon the same terms from all licensees (FF. 33, R. 4148-9), that the negotiations leading up to the various licenses were open and above board (FF. 34, R. 4149), that the licenses were enforced (FF. 35, R. 4149), that the companies which became licensees did so to settle or avoid litigation and obtain the right to use USG's patents, considering it a business necessity to be able to do so (FF. 36, R. 4149) and that each of the licensees decided to take a license independently of the other companies and without regard to what other companies did (FF. 37, R. 4150).

The Trial Court found that the evidence introduced by the Government did not establish that the license agreements were lacking in good faith because executed with intent to accomplish restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly, by illegally raising and fixing at arbitrary and non-competitive levels the prices of gypsum board, by accomplishing improper standardization of gypsum board and its method of production, by raising, maintaining and stabilizing the level of prices of unpatented materials—plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products, by effectuating improper restrictions upon distribution of gypsum board, plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products, or by fixing the prices at which manufacturing distributors resell gypsum board (FF. 57, R. 4155).

The Government charged that the actual operations of the defendants were carried beyond the activities contemplated by the agreements as written and into the field denounced by the Sherman Act. The Trial Court held that the actual operations of the defendants under the license agreements were not carried beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly and licensing thereunder, nor beyond the activities contemplated by the agreements as written, nor into the field denounced by the Sherman Act (FF. 86, R. 4160-1).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The establishment by a patentee of a minimum price for his licensee on the patented product made and sold by such licensee is a fundamental right under the patent law and is not an illegal restraint of trade.

The privileges granted by the Government under the patent laws create a limited monopoly. But the patent monopoly is not the "obnoxious" monopoly which was unlawful at common law and which was the object of the Sherman Act. The patent laws and the Sherman Act are not in conflict. Any monopoly or restraint of trade which is within the area of the patent coverage is not rendered unlawful by the Sherman Act.

The area of a patentee's power to exclude others is bounded by the claims of the patent. Within that area of exclusion the sanctions of the Sherman Act do not apply. The patentee may share that area of exclusion with another.

by way of license. In granting such a license the patentee may impose any restriction or condition which is not more restrictive of free competition than the patent itself. Accordingly a restriction on a licensee's price in respect of his sales of the patented article made under the license is a proper restriction and not outlawed by the Sherman Act. These considerations were recognized by this Court in the General Electric case.

The General Electric case was correctly decided. The doctrine that price control of a licensee is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure has not been changed or modified by subsequent decisions. All subsequent references by this Court to the General Electric doctrine recognize its soundness.

The doctrine of the General Electric case should not be overruled. The right of a patentee to charge a non-competitive price is the most important element of value in a patent. A patent license without a price limitation permits the licensee to destroy this main value of the patent. Consequently if the General Electric doctrine is overruled it is inevitable that patentees will grant no licenses. The ultimate result will be a lessening instead of an increase of competition. If it is desirable to change the rule of law recognized by the General Electric case, the change should be made by Congress, rather than this Court. Numerous bills have been introduced in Congress to effect such a change but none of them has been adopted.

The case at bar cannot be distinguished from the General Electric case. The principal patents involved in the licenses here are product patents of substantial value. They cover important developments in the manufacture of gypsum board just as the three principal patents which were involved in the General Electric case.

The General Electric case cannot be distinguished upon the ground that in it there was involved only one license with price control whereas in the instant case there are several licenses. The reason behind the decision did not turn on the question of the number of licenses. If price control is proper for one license it is proper for a plurality of licenses. The exclusion of the public from the field marked out by the patent is complete, whether there be no license, one license, or many licenses.

The General Electric case cannot be distinguished in respect of the provisions for controlling the prices and terms and conditions of sale of the licensee. The General Electric decision sanctions the establishment not only of a price but also terms and conditions incidental thereto. The price provisions in the instant case are no more restrictive than those which existed in the General Electric case.

The Trial Court's procedure under Rule 41(b) of the Rules of Civil Practice was correct. Moreover, it properly held that the Government had the burden of establishing the unlawful conspiracy charged in the complaint. It also correctly applied the rule that declarations of one alleged co-conspirator are not binding upon another unless a conspiracy is established by evidence aliunde the declarations and even then only when the declarations are in furtherance of the common purpose.

The Trial Court's findings of fact were amply supported by the evidence and are not subject to review in this Court. The Government's statement of alleged facts is distorted, inaccurate and misleading.

There is no authority, statutory or otherwise, for one branch of the Government (the Department of Justice) to review the determinations of another (the Patent Office) on matters entrusted to the latter by law. The Government may not attack its own patent grant for reasons other than fraud and contend that persons who relied upon such grants in good faith have violated the anti-trust laws. Accordingly, the Court below properly ruled that the Government in an anti-trust action may not review the determinations of the Patent Office and attack the validity of patents relied upon as a foundation for license agreements.

ARGUMENT

Point I.

THE ESTABLISHMENT BY A PATENTEE OF A MINIMUM PRICE FOR HIS LICENSEE ON THE PATENTED PRODUCT MADE AND SOLD BY SUCH LICENSEE IS A FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT UNDER THE PATENT LAW AND IS NOT AN ILLEGAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

(a) It Was Correctly Held in the General Electric Case that an Integral Part of the Patent Grant is the Right to Fix the Licensee's Price.

The doctrine of the General Electric case should be considered in the light of certain principles of the patent laws and the anti-trust laws which, while elementary, will bear recital here. Since 1790,[14] 100 years prior to the passage of the Sherman Act, the Congress of the United States has exercised its constitutional prerogative "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."[15]

[14]The first patent statute was enacted on April 10, 1790, during the Second Session of the First Congress. I Statutes at Large 109.

[15]United States Constitution, Art. I, Section 8, Clause 8.

In formulating the patent grant, Congress gave a right of exclusion rather than the right to make, use and sell the patented invention. "The franchise which the patent grants, consists altogether in the right to exclude everyone from making, using or vending the thing patented, without the permission of the patentee." Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539, 549 (1852). "The patent grant is not of a right to the patentee to use the invention, for that he already possesses. It is a grant of the right to exclude others from using it." Special Equipment Co. v. Coe, 324 U. S. 370, 378 (1945).

A patent is a contract between the inventor and the public pursuant to which the former discloses the nature of his invention for all to study and know and at the end of the patent term to practice without restraint, and the latter covenants to grant and to protect the right of exclusion for a limited time. It is a bargain founded upon mutual considerations which should be supported and carried out in good faith by both sides.[16] Otherwise the promotion of the useful arts, which is the interest and policy of every enlightened government, will be defeated.

To the extent that a patent excludes all others from a particular area of trade for a limited time it is termed a monopoly. But it is not the monopoly which historically has been regarded as detrimental to the public welfare or illegal. The patent privilege is distinct from the "obnoxious" monopoly which repressed the rights and liberties of the people and was illegal at common law.[17] "A patent for a useful invention is not, under the laws of the United States, a monopoly in the old sense of the law."[18]

It was neither the purpose nor the result of the Sherman Act that the patent laws should be modified or changed. The background of the Act demonstrates that its sanctions were designed to apply to restraints of trade which were illegal at common law.[19] These, of course, were not such restraints as are set up by the so-called patent monopoly. The Court is familiar with the statement of Senator Sherman, the proponent of the Sherman Act:

> "* * * It is the unlawful combination, tested by the rules of common law and human experience, that is aimed at by this bill, and not the lawful and useful combination. * * * A limited monopoly secured by a patent right is an admitted exception, for this is the only way by which an inventor can be paid for his invention."[20]

[17] As early as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, there had grown up in England a practice on the part of the Sovereign of granting special privileges to merchants and others covering particular areas of trade and particular territories. The granting of these monopolies, also called patents, was greatly abused by the Crown until "there was scarcely a family in the realm that did not feel itself aggrieved by the oppression and extortion which the abuse naturally caused." Macaulay, History of England, Vol. I, p. 67. The Statute of Monopolies, passed by the English Parliament in 1623, was the culmination of a struggle against these monopolies. It outlawed the multitude of artificially created monopolies but specifically provided that its declarations should not extend to patents for invention (21 Jac. 1, Ch. 3).

[19] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 50-1.

The Sherman Act and the Patent Laws are not in conflict because:

> "* * * there can be no monopolizing in the legal and accurate sense of the word where there can be no common occupation. Where in the very nature of things there must be exclusion of all others but one, there can be no monopolizing" (Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. 599, 620 (1915) cert. denied 238 U. S. 635).

A patent by its very nature involves restraints of trade which otherwise might be unlawful. This Court has recognized that > "Of course, there is restraint in a patent. Its strength is in the restraint, the right to exclude others from the use of the invention, absolutely or on the terms the patentee chooses to impose. This strength is the compensation which the law grants for the exercise of invention. Its exertion within the field covered by the patent law is not an offense against the Anti-Trust Act. * * *" (United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32, 57 (1918)).

Admittedly parties may sometimes have improperly restrained trade beyond the permissible limits of the patent monopoly but the decisions dealing with such situations consistently uphold the monopoly within the proper area of the patent coverage. In Boston Store of Chicago v. American Graphophone Company, 246 U. S. 8 (1918) this Court stated (p. 26):

> "* * * nothing in the decided cases to which we have referred, having regard either to the application of the general law or of the patent law, deprives an inventor of any right coming within the patent monopoly, since the cases alone concerned whether the monopoly of the patent law can be extended beyond the scope of that law or, in other words, applied to articles after they have gone beyond its reach. * * *"

A reconciliation of the apparent conflicts between the patent laws and the anti-trust laws was made in United States v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800 (D. C. Penn. 1915), appeal dismissed by stipulation, 247 U. S. 524 (1918). The language of the Court is sufficiently pertinent to justify the following quotation. It was said (pp. 804-5):

"A peculiarity of the rights of the owner of a patent, as distinguished from other property, is this: Each has the right to sell that which is his, but the owner of the patent has the exclusive right to sell his patented article. This is, in a very substantial sense, a monopoly. It must be, however, that the monopoly here meant is not the monopoly condemned by the act of 1890. To hold otherwise would clearly be, as counsel for defendants urge, a logical absurdity, because there can be no such thing as restraint in a trade which has no existence, and a monopoly created by law, in pursuance of a policy of the law, cannot be said to result from such restraint. * * *

"The solution of the problem is to be sought by finding the special field of operation of each of these laws. There is a field of trade, the sole occupancy of which may be in a patentee. Here he is supreme, and the keeper of the gate of entrance. There is another field which is in the common occupancy of all. Where the law has given the whole field to a patentee, with the express right of exclusion of others, and the use of the power of the law to enforce the exclusion, it is unthinkable that such exclusion is an illegal restraint of trade."

In the instant case the basic problem likewise is to find the particular field of operation of both the patent laws and the anti-trust laws as applied to the patent license agreements and activities of defendants here. More precisely, the question here is whether a patentee who agrees to share his patent monopoly with another on condition that his licensee maintain a minimum price on the patented article made and sold by the licensee is protected by the patent laws or condemned by the anti-trust laws.

It has been said that within the area of his invention, the patentee is supreme. The area of his power to exclude others is bounded by the claims of his patent. He may practice his invention by himself and reap what reward he can from being the sole maker and seller of the patented article. If he chooses, he may do nothing to exploit or practice his invention and, like a dog in the manger, exclude all others from the field of his control for the statutory period of 17 years. Special Equipment Co. v. Coe, 324 U. S. 370, supra. Or he may share his rights with others by way of license. General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175 (1938).

A license is simply an agreement by which the patentee allows another to enter a part or all of the area of exclusion of his patent. Such an agreement does not conflict with the anti-trust laws any more than does the patent itself. In fact there is less conflict, for a license promotes competition by giving the public the benefit of two or more sources of supply where there was but one before. The common occupation in the field of the patent by the patentee and one or more licensees is fully in accord with freedom of competition because, absent the license, the field would belong exclusively to the owner of the patent.

Since a patent license agreement is a sharing of the patent monopoly it too partakes of the characteristics of monopoly and must be considered in the light of the patent privilege rather than the rules of ordinary commercial transactions. Inevitably a patent license agreement contains restrictive provisions which, but for the patent, would be of questionable legality. But a patent license restriction which is operative only within the area of exclusion of the patent does not impinge upon the competitive guarantees of the anti-trust laws. Where the law grants the right to exclude all others and also the right to license others fully to practice within the field of exclusion, it cannot be unlawful for the parties to act between these extremes and for the patentee to yield and the licensee to accept but a portion of the patented field. In other words, a restriction or condition of a patent license cannot be unlawful so long as it is not more restrictive of free competition than the patent itself.

These fundamental concepts establish the legality of a license provision restricting the price of the licensee on his sales of the patented product made by him. Since the patent owner has a monopoly, theoretically every sale of the patented product would be an unreasonable restraint of trade.[21] But even the anti-trust Division has not yet contended that the prohibitions of the anti-trust laws extend to sales of the patented product by the owner of the patent himself. If it is lawful for the patentee to control his own price within the area of monopoly, no greater restraint is imposed on free competition to permit the patentee to control the price of the licensee who is permitted to share the field of the patent. The position of the public in respect of price competition is certainly no worse than it was before the license. And as we have indicated before the public is otherwise benefited, for with each license there is an additional source of supply of the patented article with possibilities of better quality, more efficient service and the like.

The logic behind sustaining the right of a patentee to impose price restrictions on his licensees was recognized by the Court in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, supra, as follows (pp. 489-491):

> "But the question is a different one which arises when we consider what a patentee who grants a license to one to make and vend the patented article may do in limiting the licensee in the exercise of the right to sell. The patentee may make and grant a license to another to make and use the patented articles, but withhold his right to sell them. The licensee in such a case acquires an interest in the articles made. He owns the material of them and may use them. But if he sells them, he infringes the right of the patentee, and may be held for damages and enjoined. If the patentee goes further and licenses the selling of the articles, may he limit the selling by limiting the method of sale and the price? We think he may do so, provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly. One of the valuable elements of the exclusive right of a patentee is to acquire profit by the price at which the article is sold. The higher the price, the greater the profit, unless it is prohibitory. When the patentee licenses another to make and vend, and retains the right to continue to make and vend on his own account, the price at which his licensee will sell will necessarily affect the price at which he can sell his own patented goods. It would seem entirely reasonable that he should say to the licensee, 'Yes, you may make and sell articles under my patent, but not so as to destroy the profit that I wish to obtain by making them and selling them myself.' He does not thereby sell outright to the licensee the articles the latter may make and sell, or vest absolute ownership in them. He restricts the property and interest the licensee has in the goods he makes and proposes to sell.

"This question was considered by this court in the case of Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. A combination of manufacturers owning a patent to make float spring tooth harrows, licensed others to make and sell the products under the patent, on condition that they would not during the continuance of the license sell the products at a less price, or on more favorable terms of payment and delivery to purchasers, than were set forth in a schedule made part of the license. That was held to be a valid use of the patent rights of the owners of the patent."

The foregoing discussion demonstrates, we submit, that the General Electric case was correctly decided and that the inevitable conclusion is that under our patent system, a patentee may impose price restrictions on his licensee.

(b) The Doctrine of the General Electric Case has not been Changed or Modified by Subsequent Decisions.

The recent decisions of this Court do not detract from the fundamental proposition that the owner of a patent may establish the minimum price at which his licensee may manufacture and sell the patented product, originally upheld in Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U. S. 70 and reaffirmed in the General Electric case.[22] In fact, all later references by this Court to the General Electric doctrine recognize its soundness.

In Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Development Corp., 283 U. S. 27 (1931) this Court held that a patentee cannot provide as a condition of a license that unpatented materials used in connection with the invention should be purchased only from the patentee but nevertheless recognized that a patent owner "can grant licenses upon terms consistent with the limited scope of the patent monopoly. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 489" (283 U. S. at p. 31).

In General Talking Pictures Co. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175 (1938), on rehearing, 305 U. S. 124 (1938), further rehearing denied, 305 U. S. 675 (1939), this Court stated when the case was first heard:

> "Unquestionably, the owner of a patent may grant licenses to manufacture, use or sell upon conditions not inconsistent with the scope of the monopoly" (304 U. S. at p. 181).

On rehearing of the same case it was stated:

> "That a restrictive license is legal seems clear. Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544. As was said in [22]The rule has been uniformly applied in the lower courts in many cases including Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket Co., 82 Fed. (2d) 245 (C. C. A. 2d, 1936); General Electric Co. v. Willey's Carbide Tool Co., 33 Fed. Supp. 969 (D. C. Mich. 1940); and United States v. Wayne Pump Co., 44 Fed. Supp. 949 (N. D. Ill. 1942).

> United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 489, the patentee may grant a license 'upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure.' The restriction here imposed is of that character." (305 U. S. at p. 127).

In Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 (1939), this Court held that certain restrictions in motion pictures' distributors' licenses to exhibitors had exceeded the scope of the copyright monopoly but referred to the Bement and General Electric cases and recognized that > "a patentee has power to control the price at which his licensee may sell the patented article * * *" (306 U. S. at p. 228).

In Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 (1940), this Court held that the effort to fix the resale price of jobbers was improper but no question was raised as to the provision in the licenses to the refining companies by which the licensees were required to sell "at a certain fixed price differential above the average net sales price of the licensees' best non-premium grade of gasoline" (309 U. S. at p. 448). In the opinion in that case, this Court stated:

> "The patent law confers on the patentee a limited monopoly, the right or power to exclude all others from manufacturing, using, or selling his invention. R. S. § 4884, 35 U. S. C. § 40. The extent of that right is limited by the definition of his invention, as its boundaries are marked by the specifications and claims of the patent. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U. S. 502, 510. He may grant licenses to make, use or vend, restricted in point of space or time, or with any other restriction upon the exercise of the granted privilege, save only that by attaching a condition to his license he may not enlarge his monopoly and thus acquire some other which the statute and the patent together did not give." (309 U. S. at p. 456).

In United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265 (1942), this Court disapproved the del credere agency arrangement of the "hardboard" industry, but said that the case did not present

> "any question as to the validity of a license to manufacture and sell, since none of the 'agents' exercised its option to acquire such a license from Masonite. Hence we need not reach the problems presented by Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and that part of the General Electric case which dealt with the license to Westinghouse Company. * * *" (316 U. S. at p. 277).

In United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241 (1942), this Court held that the attempt to fix the price of a patented article beyond the first sale constituted an improper extension of the scope of the patent monopoly but this Court in no way rejected the proposition announced by the lower Court (41 Fed. Supp. 258) as follows:

> "Nor does the owner of a patent violate the Sherman anti-trust law by fixing prices in license agreements under which articles may be manufactured and sold by the licensees." (41 Fed. Supp. at p. 264).

In Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661 (1944), and Mercoid Corporation v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Co., 320 U. S. 680 (1944), this Court was dealing with combination patents covering installed heating systems which neither the patent owner nor the licensees sold or installed. It was held that the monopoly of the combination patents could not be extended to impose restrictions on unpatented parts of the combination but this Court in no way disavowed the doctrine of the Bement and General Electric cases.

That the doctrine of the General Electric case has not been changed or modified by subsequent decisions was recognized in the expression of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in a dissenting opinion in MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402 (1947) as follows:

> "It is not questioned that a price-fixing clause in a license to manufacture under a valid patent falls outside the interdict of the anti-trust acts. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70. The power to fix the price of patented articles is part of the patent grant. It is a mode of maintaining the integrity of a patent and as such is sanctioned by public policy. * * *"

(c) The Doctrine of the General Electric Case Should not be Overruled.

In subdivision (a), supra, we considered the logic and reasonableness of the decision in the General Electric case. A significant factor underlying the decision is that a normal and lawful incident of the patent monopoly is the ability of the patentee to establish his price as high as possible and without concern for the competition of others. "One of the valuable elements of the exclusive right of a patentee is to acquire profit by the price at which the article is sold. The higher the price, the greater the profit, unless it is prohibitory."[23] The right of a patentee to charge a non-competitive price is the chief element of value in his right of exclusion. It lies at the foundation of the patent right. Congress may have rewarded patentees for the disclosure of their inventions with specific grants of money or other property. Instead a monopoly for a limited period was given. Congress felt that this was the best way to reward a patentee commensurate with the value of his discovery. If his discovery was such that it resulted in great public demand and that other articles could not be used in substitution, obviously his profit was greater for he could charge more. The value of the patent varies in each case with the importance of the discovery, but it always depends on the right to charge a non-competitive price.

When a patent is shared with a licensee, the value of the patent is destroyed unless the licensee's price is restricted. Otherwise the licensee is a competitor with his licensor and able to cut his price and take his trade so long as any premium is charged for the invention itself. It is obvious from what we have said that if the owner of the patent has been able to charge a substantial premium because of the importance and novelty and usefulness of the patented product, his licensee, if unrestricted, has the power entirely to destroy that advantage.

It is no answer to argue that the patentee may protect himself against underselling by his licensee by charging royalties (Gov. brief, p. 264). The Government forgets principle for opportunity in making this argument since it would seem that if a price restriction in a license is unlawful, so too is a royalty restriction, especially if maintained to influence the licensee's price. Furthermore, the argument loses sight of the fact that a royalty is the consideration for sharing the monopoly of the patent—not destroying it. A royalty cannot be realistically considered as a protection against price cutting by the licensee. To be such it would have to be assumed that the costs of production of licensor and licensee are identical and in addition that a licensee would not reduce his margin of profit to gain an advantage over his licensor. A licensee might well absorb the royalty and still cut prices by reducing his own margin of profit. An increase in royalty to the point where it wiped out any margin of profit would undoubtedly destroy the possibility of price cutting but by the same token it would destroy the value of the license.

The inevitable consequence of overruling the General Electric doctrine will be that patentees will no longer license others to share their monopolies. The net result then of a change in the law, requested in the name of free competition, will be instead a reduction of competition and a corresponding concentration of all trade controlled by patents in the hands only of the patentees.

The present record is replete with evidence, and the Trial Court found, that USG insisted as a condition of granting licenses that it should have the right to establish the minimum price of the patented product made and sold by the licensees (FF. 33, R. 4148-4149). If the parties had been unable lawfully to agree upon such a condition there would have been no licenses and the many licensees would have been unable over the years to supply their customers with the improved products. We may speculate on what would have been the result. The licensees might have gone out of the gypsum board business leaving the field entirely to USG. They may have infringed and thereby subjected themselves to immense damages.[24]. They may have attempted to compete with inferior products with the probability of bankruptcy (see FF. 60, R. 4155). One thing seems certain and that is neither the position of the public nor the competitive situation would have been enhanced.

The Government's request that the General Electric case be overruled thus involves a complex problem of economic policy. The ramifications of the problem need only be alluded to to show that this Court is not an appropriate place to urge such a drastic change in the law. This Court has no facilities for determining how many industries are affected by patents, how many licenses with price control provisions exist, how many licensees would be thrown out of business if price controls were outlawed, and how much competition would be lost rather than gained. These are obviously matters that should be investigated and considered by the legislature which can then decide to what extent, if any, the law should be changed. That at least is our tradition in government.

The Government has argued that the General Electric case should be reconsidered because it was based upon the Bement case and because certain general principles mentioned in the latter case have since been modified. In the Bement case reference is made to the case of Heaton-Peninsular Button Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288 (C. C. A. 6th, 1896) which, like Henry v. A. B. Dick Company, 224 U. S. 1 (1912) held that since a patentee has the complete power of exclusion he can impose any condition upon a licensee including conditions which would enlarge his patent monopoly so as to include unpatented materials. These cases were overruled in 1917 by the decision in Motion Picture Patents Company v. Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 243 U. S. 502. The Government thus contends that the Bement case has been discredited. What the Government fails to point out is that precisely this same argument was made nine years after the Motion Picture Patents case in the General Electric case. This Court then stated in answer to that argument that the overruling of the Dick and Button Fastener cases by the Motion Picture Patents case did not carry with it the overruling of the Bement case. United States v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476, 493, supra. The reasoning of the Dick and Button Fastener cases was not invoked in the General Electric case. There the decision proceeded on the theory that a patentee may impose conditions upon his licensee which are reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure. The test was, not whether the license restriction is convenient or profitable to the patentee wholly without regard to whether the patentee is profiting from or restraining trade beyond the area covered by his patent, but whether it is reasonably adapted to the securing of the pecuniary reward as defined and limited by the patent.

As early as 1912 proposals have been made in Congress to outlaw price restrictions in patent licenses but none of these has been enacted into law.[25] In 1941 the Temporary National Economic Committee recommended that the patent and anti-trust laws be amended to require patentees to grant only unrestricted licenses.[26] Since then, particularly in the last five years, many bills outlawing price restrictions in patent licenses have been introduced.[27] But none has ever been adopted. This record shows that the legislative intent is that the General Electric doctrine should be adhered to. In any event it is clear that any change in the doctrine should not be initiated in this Court. The end sought to be achieved is legislative, rather than judicial; the Government's arguments would be more appropriately addressed to Congress. This type of commercial regulation is the duty of the elected representatives of the people which determine both the advisability of and the method for accomplishing the regulation. If Congress should change the attitude which it has had thus far and look upon the regulation here sought as wise, that regulation would operate prospectively and would not produce the serious economic problems that would flow from a court decree. A multitude of patentees and licensees have entered into and long practiced the privileges recognized by the General Electric decision. In the instant case the Trial Court specifically found that the license agreements were entered into upon the faith of the General Electric and Bement cases (FF. 31, R. 4148). It would be unconscionable for any Court summarily to upset these business relationships, wipe out substantial interests in patent privileges, and retroactively subject the parties not only to civil liability in treble damage suits but to criminal penalties as well.

The Government argues that the General Electric doctrine produces confusion and uncertainty because it is difficult to determine what price is one "normally and reasonably" adapted to secure the pecuniary reward of the patent. This is a "red herring" argument. In the General Electric case this Court held that price control in general, and not any particular price, was a condition normally and reasonably adapted to secure the reward of the patent. This means that the patentee may establish any price he wants. There is nothing "horrendous" in this conclusion.[28] If the price of the patented article is fixed at a high level, fewer people will buy it, as is recognized in the General Electric opinion. In such case, many of the public will get along with what they had before the discovery of the particular patent, or purchase substitute materials. This will result in reduced volume in the sales of the patented article. By the same token if the price is fixed at a lower figure, the volume will correspondingly increase and produce a greater pecuniary reward. In every case it is obvious that this reward will tend to be constant no matter what the price is.

Of course the nature and importance of each patent will vary and the reward in each case will depend on the public demand—if great, because of the importance of the discovery, the price may be high—if minor, the premium obtainable for the patented invention will be low. These are but elementary laws of economics which the Government ignores. They demonstrate that there will always be a "ceiling" on the reward of every patent which is measured by the true value which the public places upon the patentee's discovery. Thus there is no confusion or uncertainty whatever in applying the General Electric doctrine.

The Government, however, argues that the instant case furnishes an illustration of the alleged uncertainty which attends the General Electric doctrine because, it asserts, the pecuniary reward of USG's patents was increased because the defendants eliminated the competition of open-edge board. That argument simply confuses the issue and is without merit because it injects a factual contention which the Trial Court found on ample evidence was entirely unwarranted (FF. 66, 89, 90, R. 4156, 4161).

The Government similarly confuses the issue by arguing that the General Electric doctrine produces uncertainty in testing the reasonableness of terms and conditions of sale, as well as price. In this connection it refers to its claims that licensees were prevented from painting dealers' fences and that the industry is completely regimented. In passing, we note that it failed to prove these claims (FF. 98; R. 4163).

However, there is no uncertainty, as the present case illustrates, in determining whether the terms and conditions of sale are reasonably designed to protect the patent monopoly. The Trial Court recognized, although the Government has never been satisfied to accept what seems axiomatic, that price control encompasses not only the establishment of a price but the establishment as well of incidental terms and conditions of sale. The latter fall into two classes, those factors which directly relate to price such as terms of payment, cost of delivery to various areas, quantity sold, type of product sold, and the like, and price protective provisions designed to prevent indirect price cutting. The Trial Court found that the terms and conditions here were not materially different from those in the General Electric case (FF. 27, R. 4147). The price protective provisions of the instant case did not prevent licensees from painting dealers' fences, or from doing whatever they chose in respect of their customers. What these provisions did was simply to prevent a licensee from breaching his license and cutting the price on board through the indirect device of furnishing the customer with free paint, or any other gratuity used to influence a sale of the patented product. As the Trial Court found, the furnishing of such gratuities was just as much a cut in the price as granting an out-and-out rebate on the purchase price itself (FF. 98, R. 4163).

Next the Government contends that the very nature of patents produces uncertainty in the application of the General Electric doctrine. This contention is unsound because it proceeds on the false premise that the General Electric doctrine applies only to patents covering basic or fundamental inventions. The patentee of any product patent[29] may establish prices under a bona fide license without regard to the relative importance of his patent.[30]

The Government attempts further to confuse the issue by suggesting an analogy between a patentee's right to

[29]Although the licenses in the instant case covered process and machine patents as well as article patents, price control was limited at all times to gypsum board embodying the claims of product patents (see infra, pp. 134-135). And in considering the patents, the Trial Court only considered the product patents. Therefore it is unnecessary to consider whether the General Electric principle extends to process patents.

[30]As is hereinafter discussed in greater detail the Trial Court here found on overwhelming evidence that the principal patents involved in the licenses were product patents and "covered fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry" (FF. 24, 25, R. 4146), and further, that the licenses were bona fide (FF. 30, 38, 57, R. 4148, 4150, 4155).

control prices under a patent and his right to recover damages in infringement cases. It asserts that the rule is that damages for infringement of an improvement patent are withheld unless the patentee can show in what particulars his invention has added to the usefulness of the infringing machine and that he must separate its results distinctly from those of other parts of the machine not covered by his patent (Gov. brief, p. 241). The Government contends that the right of price control should be similarly withheld. It is sufficient answer to this contention that the rule of damages and the three cases cited by the Government in support of it do not represent the present law as this Court in Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Wagner Electric Mfg. Co., 225 U. S. 604 (1912) squarely held. The correct rule is that a patentee is entitled to all the profits realized from the sale of products containing his invention except that the defendant may show, if possible, what part of the profits were not attributable to the invention.

Finally, the Government inquires rhetorically as to what happens when several patentees have patents on a single article and they all attempt to establish a price (Gov. brief, p. 236). The answer is quite simple. Under our patent system it frequently happens that a manufacturer wants to produce an article which is covered by two or more patents owned by different persons. In order to do so without infringing, he must get a license from all the patentees. If he cannot get a license from all he cannot practice all the inventions in his manufacture. Price control makes his problem no more difficult. The obvious arrangement for him would be to have the price control provision of the multiple licenses take the form of the establishment of a minimum price. This is the usual form in any event. Under such an arrangement the manufacturer would satisfy all licenses by selling at the highest price established by any one patentee.

From the foregoing, it is clear that the only uncertainty in the application of the General Electric doctrine is that generated by the efforts of the Government to discredit the case.

Point II,

THE CASE AT BAR IS INDISTINGUISHABLE FROM THE GENERAL ELECTRIC CASE.

(a) In Respect of the Nature of the Patents.

In the General Electric case a statement appears in the discussion of the facts to the effect that three of the licensed patents—the Just & Hanaman patent covering the use of tungsten filaments in the manufacture of electric lamps; the Coolidge patent covering a process of manufacturing tungsten filaments by which their tensile strength and endurance are greatly increased; and the Langmuir patent covering the use of gas in the bulb, by which the intensity of the light is substantially increased; "cover completely the making of the modern electric lights with the tungsten filaments, and secure to the Electric Company the monopoly of their making, using and vending."[31] The Government has seized upon the words "cover completely" as the basis for an argument that it was the unusual nature of the patents which prompted the Court's decision and that price control is not justified here because the patents are not on gypsum board but on improvements therein such as the closed-edge, starch and foam (Gov. brief, pp. 221-224).

There is no justification whatever for an argument that the General Electric doctrine turned upon the Court's remark that the patents completely covered the making of the incandescent electric lamp. The record in that case shows that the General Electric patents referred to covered improvements comparable to those in the case at bar.[32]

The incandescent electric light was invented in 1880 by Thomas Edison and the original patents for such lamps had long since expired at the time of the General Electric-Westinghouse license in 1912. The light giving element in the lamp of 1880 was a carbon filament. In 1904, an improved carbon filament known as the "metallized carbon filament" was invented. Next a tantalum filament lamp was introduced. It reduced the consumption of current by about one-third as compared with the ordinary standard carbon filament lamp, but it was not a satisfactory lamp for use on alternating current. Thereafter a tungsten filament incandescent electric lamp was introduced and was thereafter developed to such an extent that it consumed only about one-third of the current consumed by the carbon filament lamp in its best form and less than one-half of that consumed by the metallized carbon lamp for the production of an equal amount of light.

However, the patents covering the tungsten filament lamp were not "basic" in the sense that they covered a fundamentally new and basic invention covering completely an incandescent electric lamp. They were for improvements upon the original invention of Edison of 1880.[33]

[32] General Electric Record on Appeal, pp. 88-90.

The tungsten filament manufactured under the Just & Hanaman patent of 1912 was very brittle and consequently it was expensive to manufacture and easily broken in shipment and use. In 1913, Coolidge, by improvements described in his patent, increased the tensile strength and endurance of the tungsten filament. In 1916, Langmuir, by what is set forth in his patent, further improved the incandescent electric lamp by the introduction of gas into the bulb and his improvement was used in many, but not all, of the tungsten filament lamps made.

Thus the three patents specifically mentioned in the decision of the Court in the General Electric case covered various features of the incandescent lamp having a tungsten filament, which represented a further development in the incandescent light field over the lamp with carbon, metallized carbon or tantalum filaments. Nevertheless, there were still incandescent lamps made with these latter types of filament. In fact, at the time the General Electric-Westinghouse license was executed in 1912, about 50% in number of the total lamps sold were of the ordinary carbon filament type.[34] After nine years of operation under the license the percentage of tungsten filament lamps increased because of their superior quality, to approximately 97% of total production.[35] Thus General Electric did not have, as the Government erroneously suggests on p. 223 of its brief, a practical monopoly immediately upon acquiring the tungsten filament patent, but only acquired it over the years as the public gradually recognized the superiority of the product.[36]

[33]In this connection some idea of the extent of the electric lamp art as it existed at the time of the filing of the three General Electric patents may be gained from the fact that the United States Patent Office had issued 725 patents on electric incandescent lamps prior to the filing of the application for the Just & Hanaman patent, 889 patents prior to the filing date of the Coolidge patent, and 924 patents prior to the filing date of the Langmuir patent, as appears from the files of the main subclasses of the United States Patent Office directed to incandescent lamps.

By these remarks we do not mean to question that General Electric Company occupied a dominant position in the incandescent lamp industry by reason of its patent ownership. It had patents not only on the tantalum filament lamps but also on the carbon and tungsten filament lamps, and the latter were included in the General Electric-Westinghouse license and the licensor reserved the right to fix the price of lamps having metallized carbon filaments and tantalum filaments the same as it did for tungsten filament lamps. The Court in the General Electric case drew no distinction as to General Electric's rights as the owner of patents covering different types of lamps. The new patented lamps then referred to by this Court were only steps in the progress of electric lamp production. They were more efficient than the old carbon filament lamp, but were nevertheless based upon

[35] General Electric Record on Appeal, p. 90.

[36] The Government gives a partial and thus misleading quotation from p. 104 of the General Electric record on appeal (Gov. brief, p. 223). The full sentence reads:

> "Because of the superiority of the tungsten filament over the carbon filament, the exclusive right to make, use and vend lamps manufactured with tungsten filaments under the aforesaid patents, if valid and lawfully acquired by the General Electric Company, and of the scope indicated by their claims, vested in their owner, the General Electric Company, what has since become a practical monopoly of the manufacture and sale of incandescent electric lamps. * * *"

Edison's original invention.[37] And those lamps are today being displaced by the fluorescent lighting of modern times. This is the history of the development in most arts.

In the gypsum board industry, USG occupies the position held by General Electric in the electric light field. The principal patents of USG upon which the license agreements in the instant case were founded, likewise covered fundamental developments in gypsum board and were essential to the manufacture of modern gypsum board. Among these were the Utzman closed-edge, Haggerty starch, and Roos foam patents. It is to be noted that these patents were upon the entire product, not merely the closed edge or starch or foam, as urged by the Government (Gov. brief, pp. 221-230). It is true, of course, that in the broad sense the inventions were not of an entirely new product,

[37]Thus, the Court in General Electric Co. v. Laco-Philips Co., 233 Fed. 96 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1916), in speaking of the Just & Hanaman patent, at page 105, said:

> "I think the invention here in suit is of great merit, entitled to firm support, and second only to Edison's. Edison found a dim pathway and transformed it into an illuminated road. Just & Hanaman have broadened that road into a boulevard, alive with blazing lights."

But as the new lamp succeeded the old Edison carbon filament lamp, so it too was itself displaced by the Coolidge filament lamp. Thus, in General Electric Co. v. Independent Lamp & Wire Co., Inc., 267 Fed. 824 (D. C. N. J., 1920), in speaking of the Coolidge patent, the Court said (p. 828):

> "The ductile tungsten filament has gone into general use, and has in large measure, if not entirely, supplanted all other filaments, including that of Just & Hanaman, for incandescent electric lamps. It is less expensive to produce, yet it has far greater durability and utility than the squirted filament. It is a commercially new product of great utility, having properties and characteristics unknown to the natural and normal tungsten, or, in fact, to any other material."

but by the same token neither were the inventions in the General Electric case.

The Utzman closed-edge patent No. 1,034,746 (R. 35-38) contained four claims, all of which were product claims. A reference to one will be illustrative of the others. Thus Claim 1 reads:

> "1. A plasterboard comprising a body, a covering of fibrous material adhering to one face of the body folded to inclose an edge of the body and overlie a portion of the opposite face thereof, and a covering of fibrous material for said opposite face of the body overlying said folded-over portion of the first mentioned covering but having its edge spaced from the edge of the board."

The Haggerty starch patent (R. 64-69) had eight product claims including, for example, the following:

> "1. A wallboard consisting mainly of gypsum and having a paper liner, cooked starch being incorporated with the gypsum, to insure secure adhesion of said paper liner."

> "9. A wallboard consisting mainly of gypsum and having a paper liner, cooked starch being incorporated with the gypsum to insure secure adhesion of the paper liner, fiber being thoroughly distributed throughout the starch to strengthen the board.

> "10. A wallboard consisting mainly of gypsum and having a paper liner, cooked carbohydrate being incorporated with the gypsum to insure secure adhesion of said paper liner."

> "11. A plasterboard, or the like, comprising a body portion of plaster, mixed with a finely comminuted starch product and a covering of paper adhering thereto."

The three Roos foam patents (R. 100-15) contained numerous product claims, for example, in the first patent, claim 9 reads:

> "9. A light weight building material composed of a hard mass of cellular structure which comprises set cementitious material having permanently fixed therein foam cells that possess their original form and which are arranged throughout the structure in foam-like formation."

and in the third foam patent, claim 14 reads:

> "14. A wallboard comprising a porous body of hardened cellular cementitious material enclosing a plurality of voids encased in tough pliable films, and cover sheets between which said cementitious material is interposed."

It is therefore clear that the principal patents in the instant case are product patents covering gypsum board. The Trial Court correctly stated in its opinion (R. 3982):

> "It is true that the gypsum and the paper in gypsum board are as such not patented; but that is equally true of the metal base and the glass of the General Electric tungsten filament lamps. The patents, although on different materials, are of similar character and bear a similar relationship to the respective industries and the development thereof. The patents principally involved in the instant case no less, and no more, cover completely the patented product than do those principally involved in the General Electric case."

The Government's criticism of the USG patents is that the inventions contained therein are not sufficiently basic or fundamental to justify price-fixing (Gov. brief, pp. 221-230). In this argument, the Government makes but passing reference to the Trial Court's finding that these patents covered fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry (FF. 24, R. 4145-4146), and entirely disregards the mass of evidence establishing this fact.

The question of whether a patent is of importance cannot be determined by an analysis of the patent itself. All the circumstances surrounding the patent have to be considered. A patent may be basic in the Government's sense as constituting an entirely new product but have no importance or value because the public has no interest in it. Under other circumstances what the Government would call a very minor improvement patent may be of great importance. For example, the increase of tensile strength in a filament appears to be an unimportant improvement yet it revolutionized the incandescent lamp industry. So, too, the discovery of a product which may not be superior at all but which can be manufactured more cheaply may be of great significance.

On the overwhelming evidence in the instant case the Trial Court concluded that the patents covered fundamental developments. The Trial Court found that prior to the Utzman invention of closed-edge board, gypsum board was a rough unfinished product with exposed edges requiring trimming in the course of manufacture and being subject to breakage in shipping and use, with consequent wastage, and that the discovery of closed-edge board solved this problem (FF. 5, R. 4133-4134). The Government assigned no error with respect to this finding (see R. 4180). The Trial Court also found that when the closed-edge board of the Utzman patent came into the market the open-edge board was largely displaced under the demand of the trade for the better product (FF. 24, R. 4145-4146). The evidence not only supports but compels these findings.

Blagden testified that Beaver "had definitely proven that the closed-edge board was the cheapest board to manufacture." "We had tried every other way, and even though we had to pay a royalty we thought it would save us money in the long run" (R. 874). He said that the consumers emphatically demanded the closed-edge type of board (R. 874-875). C. O. Brown testified that closed-edge board was a superior product costing less to make and that it was demanded by the trade (R. 1236). As to the unpatented open-edge board, he said "the trade didn't want it" (R. 1243). Miller testified as to the unpatented open-edge board that it could not be "profitably sold" and that "the trade would not accept it" (R. 1385). Whittemore testified that closed-edge board was so superior that you couldn't even sell open-edge board (R. 1398-1399, 1404). For additional evidence to the same effect see R. 1446-1447, 1455-1456, 2790, 2964-2965, 3479-3481.

Indeed the Government itself alleged in the complaint that closed-edge board represented a substantial improvement over that then on the market and that the consumer demand for it stimulated other manufacturers to produce and market a board with a protected edge (Par. 49, R. 11). The Government can hardly contend now that the closed-edge patent was of little value. The remark of Judge Evans in the opinion in Bestwall Mfg. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co., 270 Fed. 542 that he did not agree that the closed-edge board was a "daring conception" is of no consequence. In that case the Utzman closed-edge patent was held valid and infringed and, moreover, the same Judge admitted that the evidence showed that the closed-edge "protected the exposed edge of the gypsum body, prevented waste, strengthened the finished board, increased the output, improved the appearance of the finished product, and reduced cost of production. A very large increase in the production of plaster board followed the appearance of this patented article" (270 Fed. at p. 544).

As to the Haggerty patent, the Trial Court found that the Haggerty starch invention solved the "peeler" trouble in the gypsum board industry and made possible the modern high-speed production of gypsum board (FF. 12, 24, R. 4138-4139, 4145-4146). Whittemore of Certain-teed testified that starch is important in the manufacture of marketable gypsum board and that the only way to prevent "peelers" is to make starch board (R. 1230-1231, 1413-1414). Certain-teed had been using starch for a considerable period and was concerned that it would be held as an infringer (R. 1413). Holland testified that his investigation disclosed that everybody in the industry was infringing the Haggerty starch patent (R. 961). Since Universal was without funds it was unable to institute infringement suits other than the one against National (R. 961-962). This disposes of the assertion of the Government that other companies had been able to compete prior to the summer of 1929 although Universal owned the starch patent (Gov. brief, p. 228). Of course they could compete so long as they infringed.

In the suit by Universal against National on the Haggerty patent, the Court recognized that National would be irreparably injured if it were enjoined from using starch or carbohydrate in its board and therefore permitted it to continue its manufacture under bond (Universal Gypsum & Lime Co. v. Haggerty, 21 Fed. (2d) 544, 547). A substantial claim for infringement of the Haggerty patent was outstanding against USG (R. 963). Although the record does not show the precise amount, the price received by Universal upon the sale of the Haggerty patent was "a very large sum of money" which was instrumental in bringing the company out of receivership (R. 964). Other companies found it necessary to use starch to obtain adhesion between the core and the paper liners (R. 1384, 3481-3483).

All of this evidence demonstrates the fundamental character of the Haggerty invention. The Government's suggestion that the "peeler" problem is easily solved by proper inspection is in no way supported by the record reference cited (Gov. brief, p. 229) and is contrary to the fact. Gypsum board is made in a continuous strip which proceeds along a traveling belt and eventually passes through enclosed drying kilns. By the time a run of board emerges from the drying kiln and is inspected and found to be a peeler, thousands of square feet of board may have been wasted (See R. 472-478, 482-485, 2991).

As to the foam patents, the Government is not aided by the fact that cellular cements as a building product were, broadly speaking, known prior to Roos' invention (See Gov. brief, pp. 238-39). Merely creating holes or voids in a plastic mass was not enough in a gypsum building product. Roos' discovery was a cellular gypsum produced by a foam which was pre-made and introduced into the mass thereby creating a foamlike formation so as to leave the same kind of voids in the product as the foam itself and result in a product having cells or voids uniformly distributed throughout and therefore of necessary strength to form the core material of gypsum board.[38]

[38]There is no support for the idea that the first two Roos patents may be disregarded because "they do not read on wallboard." (Gov. brief, pp. 230, 290). The claims cover a "lightweight building material" and are therefore generic to a building material of which gypsum board is one of the species. Consequently it is obvious that the claims read on gypsum wallboard, lath and plasterboard.

Not only the text of the Roos patents (R. 105, 110) but also the testimony of Whittemore (R. 1409-1411) establish that attempts had been made to produce cellular gypsum and particularly cellular gypsum board by mixing an effervescing agent in the gypsum slurry during the course of manufacture. This proved inefficient and uncontrollable (R. 1409).

The Trial Court found that sawdust had become difficult to obtain and was moreover unsatisfactory as an "aggregate" because of variation in quality and character which produced manufacturing difficulties and that the use of the foam of the Roos patents solved these difficulties and produced a superior product with reduced manufacturing costs. No error is assigned with respect to these findings (see R. 4181).

There is ample evidence in the record that the Roos foam patents produced a superior product with reduced manufacturing costs and permitted a lighter weight board which was important in reducing shipping costs (R. 1407-9, 1413, 1414, 1464, 2030, 2790-92, 3481-3482).

Finally, in connection with all the patents, it is to be noted that substantial evidence of their great value lies in the fact that USG collected over $700,000 in damages for infringement, and royalties totaling many times this amount. The precise figure of royalties does not appear in the record but an indication of its size is given by the testimony that Ebsary, one of the smaller companies in the industry, paid approximately $200,000 (R. 3079).

(b) In Respect of the Number of Licenses with Price Control and the Extent of the Manufacture and Sale of the Patented Product under Such Control.

In the General Electric case the Court considered the General Electric-Westinghouse license which contained a provision for price control. The Government argues therefore that the General Electric doctrine should be limited to a situation where there is but one license and should not be applied where there is a plurality of licenses extending throughout an industry (Gov. brief, p. 178-180).

In considering this argument, it is to be noted that whereas the General Electric-Westinghouse license was the primary point of conflict in the General Electric case it was not a simple, isolated license with insignificant effect upon the electric lamp industry. Actually, the Court had before it a patent license arrangement which encompassed substantially all of the incandescent light industry. It appears from the opinion of the Court[39] that in the year 1921 the relative percentages of the business done by the companies in the industry were as follows: General Electric 69%; Westinghouse 16%; other licensees 8%; and manufacturers not licensed 7%.

Thus as between the licensor General Electric and the licensee Westinghouse, 85% of the electric light business in the year 1921 was subject to the price restrictions of the license between them because, by its terms, the licensor was obligated not to sell at prices lower or on terms and conditions more favorable to the purchaser than those established by the licensor for sales by the licensee.[40] It is true that the General Electric licenses other than the Westinghouse license did not have price-fixing provisions, but they were restricted in respect of "the amount of lamps licensed to be sold by each such licensee during any one year."[41] The licenses granted by General Electric to Westinghouse and the other licensees contemplated a pro-rating of business between the licensor and all of its licensees, and also included type restrictions.[42]

[40] General Electric Record on Appeal, pp. 121, 125. The Government is in error in asserting that there was nothing of this sort in the General Electric case. (Gov. brief, p. 253). Upon the principles we have discussed, the patentee may agree not to establish the licensee's price at any higher level than his own.

License provisions limiting the quantity of products which a licensee may manufacture and sell or restricting the type of products may be fully as restrictive as a reservation of price control and, except for the legitimization of a patent, such provisions would be unlawful. Thus in the General Electric case the restrictive provisions of the licenses involved 93% of the industry, with actual price-fixing provisions applicable to 85%. These figures largely refute any argument that the General Electric case is distinguishable because in the instant case 100% of the gypsum board manufacturers located in the so-called Eastern area were licensor and licensees.

But, in any event, the reasoning of this Court in deciding the General Electric case did not turn on the number of price-fixing licenses nor the extent of an industry to which the control of the patented product applied. Its reasoning was as follows: The owner of the patent has a monopoly which excludes all others. He may share that monopoly by a license. It can make no difference so far as the Sherman Act is concerned whether the owner of the patent retains his monopoly or grants one license, or grants many licenses. The field of exclusion is always the same and there is no valid reason why the Sherman Act requires competition within the area of exclusion among licensor and a plurality of licensees. This reasoning was adopted by the Trial Court in the instant case which stated that "if the patent laws, despite the Sherman Act, do not legitimatize a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of a patented product by a patentee-licensor and several licensees, they cannot legitimatize a monopoly by the patentee-licensor and one licensee or by the patentee alone, because in each instance the exclusion of the public from manufacture, use or sale within the field marked out by the patent is exactly the same, i.e., complete" (R. 3983).

[42] General Electric Record on Appeal, p. 113.

Much of the Government's discussion of alleged facts has to do with talk among the members of the gypsum board industry; one manufacturer inquires whether a license should be taken, another recommends the license, another complains about the terms, all face large damages for infringement and look for the settlement most beneficial to his own company. That is what the proof adds up to. This cannot constitute unlawful conduct if it is lawful to have a plurality of licenses. If something is lawful, it can scarcely be unlawful to talk about it. These considerations were well stated by the Trial Court in the form of questions to Government counsel (R. 3996-3998):

> "Justice Stephens: * * *
> "Let's assume for the moment that the General Electric case means that he can only have one licensee. He cannot enter into an agreement with that licensee without discussion of terms and conditions and prices; so that far, at least, the discussion cannot be illegal. The getting together of the parties cannot be said to be the kind of a conspiracy which is illegal under the Sherman Act because the Sherman Act and the patent laws stand together.

"I have difficulty in seeing, taking the next step, how it can be said that the General Electric case confines a patentee to licensing one licensee—because what difference can it make, if he has a right to retain the whole patent monopoly in himself if he wishes to, whether he divides it with one or divides it with ten or with a hundred. It is still a patent monopoly. The public is excluded except to the extent that he gives it the benefit of the invention by using it himself or by dividing it with licensees. If it then follows from the General Electric case that a patentee can have more than one licensee, again how can it be illegal for the group of licensees or the several licensees to discuss either with him or with each other the terms of license arrangements? In short, how can the law both give and take away with the same hand? It gives the right to enter into either one or a group of patent-license agreements. Does it not necessarily also give the right to do the things that are normally necessary to constitute such agreements—talk about them and discuss the terms? Must a patentee go by stealth and by night to each licensee separately to make out the license agreement and avoid any discussion with the group?

"Moreover, if the suggestions I have made concerning the General Electric case are sound, if it is lawful to enter into a license agreement containing price-fixing terms and conditions in reasonable protection of the patent monopoly with either one or a series or a group of licensees, how can it be illegal to accomplish the inevitable economic consequences of that, which you phrase as blanketing an industry or stabilizing prices, or even producing uniformity in products because the patented product is more likely to sell because of its merit; and if it is not illegal to > accomplish the normal economic consequences of licensing, how can it be illegal to talk about them and arrange for them in entering into license agreements?"

These questions have never been satisfactorily answered.

It is argued that the Bement case on which the General Electric decision in part relied expressly pointed out that only one price-fixing license was being considered, and the Government contends that it should be inferred that a different result would have been reached if the record, which was there defective, had shown that there was a plurality of licenses (Gov. brief, pp. 178-180). The point is not well taken. The defendant in the Bement case sought to establish that the license contract upon which it was being sued was part of a larger combination in restraint of trade which had been held unlawful in several other cases. But the record did not contain proof of this defense and this Court accordingly held that the one license agreement before it for consideration was valid. In commenting upon the condition of the record however, this Court stated that the defense of illegality would only have been made out (1) if there had been other similar agreements and (2) if such other agreements had constituted an illegal combination (186 U. S. at pp. 94-95). Thus, the opinion makes it clear that the mere plurality of licenses would not have been unlawful.

In Standard Sanitary Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20 (1912), an instance where there was a plurality of licensees with price-fixing, the arrangements were held unlawful because instead of bona fide agreements there was a price-fixing scheme which the parties had sought to cover up under the guise of lawful licenses. Moreover the arrangements contemplated restraints far beyond the scope of the patent monopoly including resale price-fixing and control of products having no relation to the patents. The arrangements were held illegal for these reasons and not because there was a plurality of licenses covering 85% of the industry.

Finally, the Masonite case[43] does not support the proposition that a plurality of patent licenses to manufacture and sell may not contain price control provisions. There the defendant manufacturers had withdrawn from the field of the manufacture of "hardboard" and delegated to Masonite the right to manufacture for the entire industry. Masonite then supplied "hardboard" to all the other members of the industry under a del credere system and, of course, fixed the prices at which all should resell the product. This Court held that although a comprehensive del credere plan of distribution might be legal, as in the General Electric case, where it operated vertically through the normal channels of distribution and applied to those who would normally be the manufacturer's agents, i.e., jobbers and dealers, the system becomes illegal when it is made to operate horizontally through an industry where manufacturing competitors fix prices under the guise of agency arrangements. The fact that "hardboard" was a patented article did not save the arrangement because the disposition of the product by Masonite to the del credere agent was tantamount to a sale and exhausted any patent privileges. This Court expressly recognized that it did not have before it

> "any question as to the validity of a license to manufacture and sell, since none of the 'agents' exercised its option to acquire such a license from Masonite. Hence we need not reach the problems presented by Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and that part of the General Electric case which dealt with the license to Westinghouse Company" (316 U. S. at p. 277).

The Government's great reliance on the Masonite case is misplaced. It improperly construes the agency arrangements there as analogous to the agency arrangements considered in the first part of the General Electric case and contends that separate lawful agreements became unlawful because they ran throughout the industry. The faulty part of the argument is that the agency plans in the two cases were materially different. The illegality of the Masonite case stemmed from the fact that erstwhile competitors became the agents of one company. The decision was not controlled by the fact that there was a plurality of del credere agents. The arrangement would have been bad if it was limited to Masonite and one competitor.

(c) In Respect of the Terms and Conditions of Sale.

A summary of the terms and conditions relating to price as set forth in the licenses and price bulletins thereunder both in the instant case and in the General Electric case appears in the Trial Court's opinion and will not be repeated here (R. 3945-3947, fn. 13, 3987-3990, fn. 25). A comparison of the provisions in the two cases establishes no material distinction. If anything, the terms and conditions in the General Electric case were more detailed and restrictive than those in the instant case. In both cases the licenses were non-exclusive. There was to be no contest of the validity of patents; there were provisions for royalties, records and reports. In both cases the licenses were granted upon the condition that the licensor should have the right to establish the minimum price at which the licensee should sell the patented product manufactured by it, and such minimum prices were not to be less than those of the licensor. In both cases, in respect of price, there were two classes of provisions; one class dealing with prices as such, the other intended to protect the price fixed, i.e., to prevent indirect price cutting.

In each case the provisions for arriving at a price were formulated in the light of the fact that the actual price at which a product is sold cannot be arrived at merely by fixing an amount, but that other factors which have direct economic relationship to price—such as terms of payment, cost of delivery, including freight charges, quantities sold, type of product sold, and the like must also be stipulated.

It cannot be properly contended that terms and conditions of sale were not considered or passed upon by this Court in the General Electric case (Gov. brief, pp. 246-247). Contrary to the Government's statement on page 247 of its brief, error was assigned as to the holding that the licensor could control "the prices and terms of sales of lamps" and as to the failure to hold that the license was unlawful "because it was agreed therein that the licensee would adopt and maintain the conditions of sale, or sales method, in distributing the lamps manufactured by it and moving in interstate commerce adopted and maintained from time to time by the licensor."[44] Indeed one of the main disputes in the case was whether the license required Westinghouse to use the same del credere system which was the subject of discussion in the first branch of the case. But this Court held that "the result must be the same" no matter which way the disputed question is resolved (272 U. S. at p. 489). It thus appears that this Court did not limit its ruling to price but specifically included "conditions of sale" (272 U. S. at p. 490).

Point III.

THE TRIAL COURT'S RULINGS IN RESPECT OF RULE 41(b), BURDEN OF PROOF, AND THE DECLARATIONS RULE WERE CORRECT.

(a) The Trial Court's Procedure under Rule 41(b) was proper.

Upon the defendants' motion to dismiss at the close of the Government's case under Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Trial Court weighed the evidence, drew inferences therefrom and, having determined that the Government had failed to establish its charges, rendered its decision dismissing the complaint and made findings of fact and conclusions of law. The procedure was in accord with reason, Lambuth v. Stetson & Post Mill Co., 14 Wash. 187, 44 Pac. 148 (Sup. Ct. Wash. 1896), and the great weight of authority under Rule 41(b) in particular. Gary Theater Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 Fed. (2d) 891 (C. C. A. 7th, 1941); Bach v. Friden Calculating Machine Co., 148 Fed. (2d) 407 (C. C. A. 6th, 1945); Young v. United States, 111 Fed. (2d) 823 (C. C. A. 9th, 1940); cf. United States v. Blauner Construction Co., 37 Fed. Supp. 968 (D. C. Mass. 1941).

Any question concerning this procedure has been rendered academic by the recent amendments to the Rules of Civil Procedure which now expressly sanction the action of the Trial Court in respect of Rule 41(b). Although the Government assigned error, this point has now been waived by its withdrawal of assignments of errors Nos. 8 to 11, inclusive (Gov. brief, p. 160).[45] The well-reasoned discussion in the Trial Court's opinion would have disposed of it in any event (R. 3958-3966).

(b) The Government had the Burden of Establishing the Unlawful Conspiracy Charged in the Complaint.

The first 43 paragraphs of the complaint describe the defendants and the gypsum industry (R. 1-9). The next 3 paragraphs bear the heading "Offenses Charged" (R. 9). Under this heading, paragraph 44 charges the defendants, in the language of the statute, with violations of Sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Sherman Act. These violations are given the collective reference of "the combination" (R. 9, 10). In paragraph 45, "the combination" is amplified by allegations that the defendants have combined to fix arbitrary and non-competitive prices for the sale of gypsum products, to standardize the manufacture of gypsum board, to control the distribution of gypsum products and to fix resale prices of manufacturing distributors (R. 10). The complaint then alleges, in paragraph 46, that "the combination" was entered into and carried out by the defendants in part under the guise of license agreements purporting to relate to the use of certain patents owned by USG; that to give color of legality to "the combination", the defendant companies and other companies agreed among themselves to enter into, and did enter into, these license agreements; and that such agreements were not bona fide patent license agreements reasonably designed to secure to USG the pecuniary reward for valid patent monopolies, but were entered into and executed for the illegal purposes described in paragraphs 44 and 45 of the complaint. It is then alleged that "the combination is more fully set forth in paragraphs 47 to 120 hereof" (R. 10-11).

In paragraphs 47 to 120 of the complaint the patent infringement litigation and the signing of the patent licenses are set forth in considerable detail and it is further alleged that defendants not only controlled the prices and terms and conditions of sale of gypsum board through the license agreements, but that there were a number of secret side agreements as well (R. 11-31). For example, it is claimed that the parties agreed that the manufacture of unpatented open-edge board would be discontinued, that USG would stabilize and raise the prices on board, that all companies would raise their prices on plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products (par. 77, R. 18-19), that certain procedures of manufacture would be considered within the coverage of the Hite and Haggerty patents for the purpose of permitting price control (par. 86, R. 21), that the manufacture of board would be standardized (par. 93, R. 25), that the distribution of gypsum products through jobbers would be terminated (par. 95, R. 25-26), and that the resale prices of manufacturing distributors would be controlled (par 108, R. 29). Likewise, it was charged that the license contracts were used as a front for fixing prices of unpatented board and to accomplish the alleged illegal side agreements referred to (par. 97-107, R. 26-29). Copies of several of the patents and license agreements are annexed to the complaint as exhibits (R. 35-130).

Paragraphs 121 to 123 set forth the effects of the alleged "combination" and the prayer for relief follows (R. 32-34).

The Trial Court held that the Government had the burden of proving the alleged combination as charged, and overruled a contention that as soon as the Government had proved the execution of the license agreements with price control provisions it had made out its case and the burden was upon the defendants to establish that such price control was valid. It is submitted that the action of the Trial Court was proper.

Under the allegations of the complaint, the alleged violations of law were not in the price control provisions of the patent licenses, nor in the failure of the parties to make patented board under the licenses, but were that the licenses were non bona fide and that the operations thereunder went beyond the scope of the patent monopoly in specified ways. Certainly it would be extraordinary to say under these circumstances that proof simply of license agreements with price control provisions made out the Government's case and cast the burden on the defendants of going on to establish that the licenses and the operations thereunder were proper.

As the Trial Court stated in its opinion (R. 4004):

> "Where the Government has pitched its case as carefully and elaborately as it has upon violation of the Sherman Act through the execution of patent license agreements not bona fide, and not designed to secure to USG the pecuniary reward for valid patent monopolies, but executed only for illegal purposes, and where the Government has set forth in such detail as it has the manner of accomplishment, through misuse of patent license agreements, of these illegal purposes, it ought to be required to prove the case it has thus alleged unless, as said, there is some clear rule of adjective or substantive law which relieves it of this burden."

The Government has been unable to furnish any authority which holds that it should be relieved of the burden of proving its case as charged. Its present brief refers to the proposition that price fixing among competitors is unlawful per se and mentions Rule 8(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which lists many affirmative defenses (but none relating to this problem) to be pleaded in a defendant's answer (Gov. brief, pp. 218-221). Obviously this does not establish that the Government, after pleading patents and patent licenses and specific unlawful conduct in connection therewith, can merely introduce the license agreements and cast upon the defendants the burden of establishing that they did not unlawfully restrain trade.

It may be admitted that price-fixing agreements are unlawful in the usual situation which has come before the courts. When disassociated from patents such agreements are unlawful because of necessity they involve an unreasonable restraint of trade. However, price control under patent licenses does not constitute an unlawful restraint of trade. If the Government in the instant case had merely alleged that type of price control, there would have been no sufficient charge of illegality. Something more than that would have had to be pleaded and proved to constitute a violation of law.

The only case cited by the Government having any bearing on the point in question is United States v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800, supra, where a passing remark is made that a defense there asserted on the basis of patent rights was "one in confession and avoidance" (225 Fed. at p. 803). But as the Trial Court herein noted (R.

4005), the pleadings in that case were not described and it cannot be determined whether the charges were, as in the instant case, that the violations of law were accomplished through the misuse of patent license agreements. So far as appears, there may have been no mention whatever of patents or patent licenses in the complaint.

The Trial Court in the instant case properly recognized that the decision in Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. 599 (C. C. A. 6th, 1915), cert. denied 238 U. S. 635 (1915), was a holding directly contrary to the Government's contention. There it was held that an indictment under the Sherman Act which charged a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and monopolization, by a company, its officers and agents, and alleged that the company had patents covering the products manufactured and sold, must also negative that the trade and commerce was covered by the patents. In the Patterson case, demurrers to three counts of the indictment had been overruled by the trial judge. On appeal after trial and conviction, the Circuit Court of Appeals found certain errors in the exclusion of evidence and in instructions to the jury in respect of the first count, and held that the demurrers should have been sustained in respect of the second and third counts. With respect to the third count, the Court said (222 Fed. at p. 625):

> "* * * The indictment, having thus charged that the National [Cash Register] Company had patents covering the cash registers made and sold by it, should have negatived that the trade and commerce which it so secured and held onto was covered by those patents. In the first count it is alleged that defendants' conduct therein complained of was not 'justified or warranted by any letters patent'; but it was not meant thereby to charge that the trade and commerce affected by the conspiracy complained of therein was not covered by the National Company's patents, for it is the position of the government that the defendants were not justified or warranted by those patents in protecting the rights so secured in that way. It is charged in the first count that at the beginning of the 20 years the National Company did 80 per cent of the manufacturing of cash registers. This of itself was a practical monopoly. It is not alleged that it had been secured by wrongful acts. Presumably it was entitled to it under its patents. It is true that it is alleged that long before the 3 years preceding the finding of the indictment most of the basic patents and many of the improvement patents had expired. But this concedes that some of the basic patents were then still unexpired at the beginning of the 3 years, and it is consistent with the fact that such was the case as to a great number of improvement patents. Everything, therefore, which the count alleges, may be true, and yet the National Company have been entitled to hold onto the business which it had so secured, in which case its conduct in so doing could not have been monopolizing."

As is fully discussed in the opinion of the Trial Court herein (R. 3999-4012) on principles of both adjective and substantive law, the burden of proof was upon the Government to prove its case as charged. It is submitted that this ruling was correct.

(c) The Declarations of one Alleged Co-conspirator are not Binding upon Another Unless a Conspiracy is Established by Evidence Aliunde the Declarations and, even then, only when in Furtherance of the Common Purpose.

The Government contends that the Trial Court erred in the application of the declarations rule (Gov. brief pp.

195-200). Our ensuing discussion will show, we submit, that there was no error. But the question is academic in any event for the Trial Court held that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the Government's charges even if the declarations were regarded as binding on all defendants (R. 4101).

In discussing the facts in this case the Government's brief totally disregards the declarations rule and treats all evidence as if it were binding on everyone. It may come as some surprise to the Court to realize that the discussion of alleged facts set forth in the first 160 pages of the Government's brief is based almost entirely on declarations.

The declarations rule is that where two or more persons act in concert, with a common purpose, the acts and declarations of one during the existence, and in furtherance, of the conspiracy, are held in law to be the acts and declarations of the others. It is premised upon the law of agency and partnership that binds one person engaged in a common venture with the acts of all so long as they are done within the scope of the common program. The nature of the rule indicates the limitations applying to it. In order to render admissible as against one co-conspirator the acts and declarations of another, (a) the existence of the conspiracy charged must be shown by independent evidence, (b) the connection of the co-conspirators with the conspiracy charged must likewise be established independently, and (c) the acts and declarations must be in execution and in furtherance of the common purpose.

In Winchester & Partridge Mfg. Co. v. Creary, 116 U. S. 161 (1885), a common purpose to defraud other creditors of a vendor by a sale of property was charged against the vendor and a vendee creditor. The trial court permitted evidence to be received as to statements made subsequent to the sale by an officer of the vendor which tended to prove the conspiracy charged. This Court reversed the case stating (p. 166):

> "* * * it is sufficient to say that such declarations are not admissible against the vendee, unless the alleged common purpose to defraud is first established by independent evidence, and unless they have such relation to the execution of that purpose that they fairly constitute a part of the res gestae. There was no such independent evidence in this case, and there is no foundation for the charge of a conspiracy between the vendors and vendee to hinder creditors, outside of certain statements which Webb is alleged to have made after his firm had parted with the title and surrendered possession."

In Thomas v. U. S., 57 F. (2d) 1039 (C. C. A. 10th, 1932), in reversing a conviction for conspiracy to violate the Prohibition Laws, the Court said (pp. 1041-1042):

> "To render evidence of the acts or declarations of an alleged conspirator admissible against an alleged co-conspirator, the existence of the conspiracy must be shown and the connection of the latter therewith established. Pope v. United States (C. C. A. 3) 289 F. 312, 315; Kelton v. United States (C. C. A. 3) 294 F. 491, 495; Isenhouer v. United States (C. C. A. 8) 256 F. 842; United States v. Goldberg, 7 Biss. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 15,223; United States v. McKee, 3 Dill. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 15,686; Burns v. United States (C. C. A. 8) 279 F. 982, 986; Dolan v. United States (C. C. A. 9) 123 F. 52; Stager v. United States (C. C. A.) 233 F. 510.
> "Declarations made by one conspirator to another are not competent evidence to establish the connection of a third person with the conspiracy.

In Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 309 (1892), this Court held that "the defendants on trial could not be affected by the admissions made by others of the alleged conspirators after the conspiracy had ended" since such declarations "were not in execution or furtherance of the conspiracy, but were mere narratives of a past fact."

Apparently in an effort to have this Court consider generally the evidence of alleged co-conspirators without proof by evidence aliunde of the existence of the conspiracy alleged here, the Government contends, on the basis of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229 (1917) that it may take any association or contact between two individuals and build it into a broad illegal conspiracy by resort to declarations of one of the individuals. The Hitchman case does not support this proposition. There, seven defendants, individually and as officials of a labor union, were charged with an unlawful conspiracy to cause plaintiff's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, and its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled, until such time as plaintiff would submit to the demand of the union to unionize its plant. The evidence showed that the union had, in meeting assembled, adopted resolutions to achieve the common purpose of unionizing the plaintiff's mine. Official stenographic reports of the meeting, including declarations of others than the defendants, were admitted and it was held that such admission was proper on common law principles of agency because the independent proof established that the union members, including the defendants, had bound themselves together to accomplish a common purpose, with the result that each member of the group in effect constituted the others as his agents, thereby making the act or declaration of one in furtherance of the common purpose the act of all. But the limitation which is implicit in the Hitchman case is that the independent evidence which must be introduced by the Government before declarations of one co-conspirator can be used to bind another must prove the very combination charged. Declarations cannot be used to prove the common purpose, nor to enlarge the scope of any common purpose which has been proved. Without this limitation, one person might be bound by the declarations of another establishing some illegal undertaking quite different from an innocent transaction in which the two had been jointly engaged.

This limitation was recognized in United States v. Food and Grocery Bureau of Southern California, 43 Fed. Supp. 966 (D. C. Cal. 1942) discussed in the opinion of the Trial Court below (R. 4022-4024). That case involved a criminal prosecution for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act against the Food and Grocery Bureau and others, charging a conspiracy to stabilize retail prices of food and grocery products. The testimony for the Government showed that what started as an effort on the part of persons engaged in the food and grocery business to secure the enforcement of the Unfair Trade Practices Act of California gradually developed into a price fixing and stabilization scheme. Thus, the starting point of the conspiracy dealt with a legal venture, i.e., the association of various persons to assist in the enforcement of the California law. Evidence consisting of declarations of alleged co-conspirators showed that the association departed from the original object and started illegally to fix prices. At the conclusion of the Government's case it moved to apply to all of the defendants evidence which had been received subject to later connection as to certain defendants. In denying this motion in respect of several defendants who were not shown, by independent proof, to have been parties to the unlawful part of the plan, the court said (43 Fed. Supp. at p. 973):

> "But unless the passage from the legal to this illegal object is brought home individually to the various defendants, mere membership in the Bureau, mere contributions toward its support, or the collection of the tax on milk by wholesalers from retailers for the use of the Bureau, are not sufficient to charge the individual members—be they persons or groups—with these acts.
> "* * * Some of the defendant organizations are co-operatives—groups consisting of hundreds of petty tradesmen. It would be wholly unfair to charge this group with the actions of some of their officers in attempting to bind them to an illegal act, unless it be shown that the matter was brought up and explained at some meeting and that the nature of the activity was clearly understood by the membership. Our law abhors crime by association. To say that a hundred grocers, bound together in a cooperative, should be found guilty of the violation of a statute of the United States because one or two of their officers or directors were also on the Board of the Bureau, would be applying to criminal law the civil law of agency. This cannot and should not be done."

The Government has consistently misconceived the theory of the declarations rule and paid no attention to its inherent limitations.[46] For example, the Government from the outset has contended that the mere showing of the existence of patent license agreements between USG and its respective licensees establishes a common program which binds every party with all the statements and acts of every other party (R. 500-507). That still appears to be its contention (Gov. brief, pp. 195-200). It certainly cannot be the law that a company which makes a lawful patent license agreement impliedly authorizes under the laws of agency and partnership all other licensees to speak and act on its behalf. The Government has two misconceptions: that similar action is synonymous with concerted action, and that a simple lawful act joined in by two parties can be automatically enlarged into a widespread program of illegality.

[46]In a footnote on page 195 of its brief, the Government requests this Court to express its views on a ruling by the Trial Court that where one defendant has admitted the authenticity of a document under Rule 36 that document may be considered as binding upon all defendants under the declarations rule. This is a request for an advisory opinion since the Government does not, indeed could not, assert reversible error on the basis of the ruling below. The Trial Court did not unqualifiedly reject the documents in this category but merely imposed upon the Government the duty of calling a witness to authenticate them in the normal way. Moreover, even now the Government does not point to anything in these documents which would have had any material effect upon the decision below.

It is submitted that the Trial Court's ruling was correct under the declarations rule that admissions of one alleged co-conspirator are not binding on another unless made in furtherance of the conspiracy. Clearly admissions of a defendant in connection with pre-trial discovery procedure are not within that rule.

Point IV

THE FINDINGS OF THE TRIAL COURT ARE SUPPORTED BY AMPLE EVIDENCE AND ARE NOT SUBJECT TO REVIEW IN THIS COURT.[47] THE GOVERNMENT'S DISCUSSION OF ALLEGED FACTS DISREGARDS THE FINDINGS AND PRESENTS A DISTORTED, INACCURATE AND MISLEADING VIEW OF THE CASE.

In this Court, as it was in the Court below, it is difficult to grasp just what the unlawful conspiracy is that the Government claims the evidence establishes. A study and analysis of even the Government's present voluminous discussion of the alleged facts makes it apparent that the claim of conspiracy rests on nothing more than the fact that USG and the several other companies entered into patent license agreements. It is true, as the Government emphasizes, that many people discussed the matter of taking licenses and wrote letters and memoranda on the subject; but that is all the evidence amounts to. We have already argued that a plurality of licenses is not an unlawful conspiracy, but is sanctioned by the General Electric case (supra, pp. 59-66). If that proposition of law is correct, it cannot be that the licenses became unlawful simply because the parties discussed them.

[47]Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that "Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses." This does not increase the scope of this Court's review but merely restates the existing rule. District of Columbia v. Pace, 320 U. S. 698 (1944). In Adamson v. Gilliland, 242 U. S. 350, 353 (1917) it was said that so long as a finding " 'depends upon conflicting testimony, or upon the credibility of witnesses, or so far as there is any testimony consistent with the finding, it must be treated as unassailable.' " The Government cannot "expect this Court to reverse a decree of the Circuit Court merely upon a doubt created by conflicting testimony." Morewood v. Enequist, 64 U. S. 491 (1859). See also Zekendorf v. Johnson, 123 U. S. 617 (1887), Lawson v. United States Mining Co., 207 U. S. 1 (1907).

The Government's brief, however, suggests at times that the unlawful conspiracy consists of the additional factor that the licenses were taken by concerted action. However, if a plurality of licenses is lawful under the General Electric case, it does not become unlawful if the licenses are signed in concert. The Trial Court so ruled on the obvious premise that "It is not unlawful to agree to do what is not unlawful when done" (R. 4107). Notwithstanding this ruling, the Trial Court also found on the facts that the defendants did not act in concert or, as the Government claims, associate themselves in a plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices (FF. 118, R. 4167).

The Government unjustifiably argues that the Trial Court examined the evidence piece-meal and not in the light of the actual charges of the complaint (Gov. brief, pp. 190-194). In its opinion, the Trial Court recognized that "evidence as to conspiracy is, of course, to be considered as a whole—not piece-meal" (R. 4016). Pursuant to that rule the Trial Court did examine all of the evidence as is clear beyond all doubt from the opinion in the case. It is doubtful whether any more careful and considered opinion has been rendered by a court in the trial of any other case.

One of the charges in the complaint was that the licenses were sham licenses (Par. 46, R. 10-11) and Government counsel consistently urged below that defendants had used their patents as a mere subterfuge by which they illegally controlled prices and production. The Trial Court properly found that the patent licenses were not "sham agreements to disguise illegal purposes" (FF. 30, R. 4148). But the Court did not conclude, as the Government asserts, "that an unlawful conspiracy could not be shown unless it involved a showing of 'sham'" (Gov. brief, p. 193). On the contrary it is clear from the very reference to the Trial Court's opinion which is cited by the Government that the Trial Court not only considered whether the licenses were "sham" licenses signed to give color of legality to illegal purposes" but also whether "the operations of the defendants were carried beyond the proper limits of the USG patent monopoly" (R. 4105).

From what has been said, it might seem that any dispute upon the facts is of little consequence in this case since the decision must ultimately rest on the question of the legality of the plurality of license agreements. It might seem too that an extended discussion of the facts is unnecessary since the Government seriously challenges only one finding of fact, namely, No. 118, that the defendants did not associate themselves in a plan to blanket the industry with patent licenses and stabilize prices. However, the good faith of the licenses is an issue, and since the Government's brief presents such an erroneous and distorted view of the facts, it is necessary to consider the Government's assertions regarding the facts in detail.

The Findings of the Trial Court in Respect of the Main Patent License Agreements

We have discussed the findings of the Trial Court generally in so far as they concern the circumstances surrounding the execution of the main license agreements in volved in the case (supra, pp. 4-23). In addition the Trial Court made a number of findings of fact relating to the good faith of the parties in signing the licenses.

The Trial Court found that the principal patents upon which the main board license agreements in the instant case were founded, to wit, the Utzman (No. 1,034,746) Haggerty (No. 1,500,452) and Roos (Nos. 2,017,022, 2,079,338 and 2,080,009) patents, were product patents upon a building material called plaster board or wallboard. The patents were upon the entire product, not merely upon the edge of the board in the Utzman patent, or upon the starch in the Haggerty patent, or upon the bubbles or air cells in the Roos patents. These patents covered fundamental developments in the gypsum board manufacturing industry. It was further found that the closed edge board of the Utzman patent largely displaced the open-edge board under the demand of the trade for the better product, that the Haggerty patent solved the "peeler" problem in the gypsum industry and made possible modern high-speed production of gypsum board, and that the Roos patents solved the "sawdust" problem and produced a superior product with reduced manufacturing costs (FF. 24; R. 4145-4146).

The Trial Court also found that no substantial distinction can properly be drawn between the instant case and the General Electric case in respect of the importance of the patents, the terms and conditions of the license agreements and the price bulletins and the number of the licenses (FF. 25, 26, 27, R. 4146-4147, Conclusions of Law 2, 3, R. 4167).

The Trial Court further found that the license agreements were executed as bona fide agreements and were not sham agreements executed to disguise illegal purposes (FF. 30, R. 4148). It was also found that the license agreements were executed upon the faith of the General Electric and Bement cases and that prior to the making of the licenses the parties thereto had been advised that such licenses giving price control to the licensor were proper and that they had a right to enter into them under the patent laws (FF. 31, R. 4148).

The Trial Court found that the license agreements required the licensees to pay, and they did pay, substantial royalties; and many of them were entered into, as noted above, in settlement of infringement litigation and in consideration of the payment of substantial damages, which damages were paid (FF. 32, R. 4148).

The Trial Court found that commencing as early as 1926 when the Beaver license was negotiated, USG offered terms of settlement of infringement claims and a license to any or all of the various board manufacturers. Throughout all of its negotiations with the various companies USG insisted upon the same terms which were: payment of damages for infringement, acknowledgment of the validity of USG's patents, payment of royalties, and the right in USG to fix prices upon board made and sold under its patents. At all times USG remained firm on these terms and rigidly insisted upon such terms for all settlements and licenses (FF. 33, R. 4148-4149).

The Trial Court found that in the making of the licenses there was nothing furtive in the action of the parties. There was open negotiation and discussion between USG and the other companies in the industry of the proposed licenses and there was open discussion among the companies other than USG of their mutual problems arising out of USG's ownership and insistence upon enforcement of dominant patent rights in the gypsum board field (FF. 34, R. 4149).

The Trial Court found that the companies which became licensees did so because they desired to settle or avoid litigation and to obtain the right to use USG's patents, considering it a business necessity to be able to do so. Several of the licensees had made the closed-edge board before they had acquired the right to do so from USG, for which infringement of the Utzman patents they paid substantial damages. Also some of the licensees had manufactured board containing starch which was covered by the Haggerty patent. Numerous other patents included in the licenses were essential to the manufacturing of modern gypsum board (FF. 36, R. 4149).

The Trial Court found that although there was discussion among the prospective licensees and with USG as to the terms of the proposed licenses and of the advantages of signing them, nevertheless the decision to take a license was reached by each of the companies independently. The licensees took their respective licenses, without regard to what other companies did. Neither Griswold of American, Blagden of Beaver, nor Holland of Universal acted, nor was told to act, as agent or emissary of USG or Avery in obtaining license agreements (FF. 37, R. 4150).

The Trial Court found that certain memoranda of C. O. Brown of Certain-teed with reference to the negotiations for the bubble board and starch licenses (Exs. 227, 231) did not establish bad faith in the execution of the license agreements either on the part of Certain-teed or any other person or company. The primary reason of Certain-teed in taking a license under the Haggerty starch and the Roos bubble board patents was that the method of manufacture was cheaper, the products could be made much lighter with resultant savings in transportation costs, and a better product resulted. Certain-teed carefully investigated the bubble board invention and concluded, about July 3, 1929, that it had merit and that a license should be taken. It had already investigated the starch situation and thought that it might be subject, on account of its own use of starch, to a claim of infringement of the Haggerty patent. When the opportunity to obtain a license under the starch patents as well as bubble board was presented, Certain-teed was glad to take advantage of it. Certain-teed was not motivated by a desire for price-fixing when it determined to take a license. There was no understanding or agreement that the starch and bubble patents or the proposed licenses would be used as a vehicle to obtain price control (FF. 39, R. 4150-4151).

The Trial Court also found that the answer of Certain-teed in USG's injunction suit and the memorandum with respect thereto (Exs. 324 and 212) did not establish bad faith in the execution of the license agreement (FF. 40, R. 4151).

The Trial Court found that the fact that for the privilege of using the patents, royalties were fixed in the license agreements at an amount equivalent to a designated percentage of the selling price of the licensees of all gypsum board manufactured by them, whether or not patented, did not establish an agreement to make only the patented product and did not establish that the license agreements were executed in bad faith. The patents were numerous and covered not only the patented board, but machines and processes in the manufacture of board, and the rights and privileges granted were of great value to the manufacturers of gypsum board. This royalty provision was in effect a provision for a percentage of gross sales, and as such was but a convenient means of measuring the amount paid for the privilege of using the patents. It might with equal propriety have been a lump sum. This provision in the license agreements was not an attempt to impose a royalty upon an unpatented product, nor was it intended to drive open-edge board off the market, nor did it have that effect (FF. 54, R. 4154).

The Trial Court found that there were no agreements between USG and licensee companies other than those which were put into formal writing. There were no informal side agreements between USG and any of its licensees or between any of the defendants herein that they would discontinue making open-edge board or seconds of closed-edge board, or that USG would advance and stabilize the prices for board, or that any of the companies would increase their prices for other gypsum products, or that USG would continue to control prices through the use of other patents after the expiration of the Utzman patent in August, 1929 (FF. 56, R. 4154-4155).

The Trial Court found that the licenses were not executed with an intent to fix prices of gypsum board at high levels or any given levels. There was at no time any understanding or agreement or even discussion as to what the prices of gypsum board would be upon the execution of the licenses (FF. 58, 59, R. 4155).

The Trial Court found that the Government had not established its charges that the license agreements were non bona fide because executed with an attempt to accomplish restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly specifically (1) illegally to raise and fix at arbitrary and non-competitive levels the price of gypsum board; (2) to accomplish improper standardization of gypsum board and its method of production; (3) to raise, maintain and stabilize the level of prices of unpatented materials—plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products; (4) to effectuate improper restriction upon distribution of gypsum board, plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products; or (5) to fix prices at which the manufacturing distributors resell gypsum board (FF. 57, R. 4155). The license agreements in the instant case were not executed with an intent to obtain objectives beyond the proper limits of a patent monopoly (FF. 85, R. 4160).

Finally, the Trial Court found that the evidence (including certain evidence specially relied upon by the Government consisting in the large of intra and inter-company correspondence and memoranda relating to the terms upon which USG was offering to settle litigation and extend licenses and the advantages and disadvantages of taking licenses—Exhibits 104, 123, 124, 132, 136b, 157, 158, 185, 189, 198, 204, 205, 206 and 716—the admission in paragraph 7 of the answer of Ebsary and the testimony of Griswold, Blagden, Holland and Lenci) failed to establish that defendants associated themselves in a plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices, as charged by the Government (FF. 118, R. 4167).

These are the general findings with respect to the main license agreements in the instant case. In addition specific findings on detailed matters were made which will be mentioned from time to time in the subsequent discussion. It is submitted that the discussion of evidence hereinafter set forth establishes beyond question that the findings were fully supported and in fact compelled by the evidence.

The Licenses of 1926 and 1927

As we have noted, Beaver found itself at the end of its rope in 1925 when it was adjudged an infringer of the Utzman closed-edge patent (R. 784, 874). Its predecessor, Bestwall, had tried and lost, both in the District Court and in the Court of Appeals, and it was obviously a forlorn expectation that the appellate court might reverse itself in favor of Beaver on substantially the same case (FF. 6, R. 4134).

Naturally Beaver had to get out of the situation as best it could. Blagden, president of Beaver, realized his case was hopeless and therefore made overtures to Avery, president of USG. At a meeting in December, 1925, Avery and Blagden discussed the possibility of settlement and Avery specified the terms of settlement as follows: (a) payment of damages by Beaver for past infringement; (b) Beaver's acknowledgment of the validity of USG's patents; (c) payment of royalties; and (d) the right in USG to fix the prices of gypsum board made and sold by Beaver under the Utzman closed-edge patent (R. 786, 870-871). From that time forward those were the same unyielding terms of Avery and USG for any and all of the companies in the industry. There were no plans or schemes or conniving. If any company wanted a license on those terms it got one. If any company chose to violate USG's patent rights without a license, it was sued as an infringer. If any company chose to try to get along without the improvements of the superior patented products, it was free at all times to do so (FF. 6, 33, 34, R. 4134, 4148-4149). Obviously this is not the stuff of which conspiracies and concerted action are made.

After negotiations which took place largely in June and July, 1926, USG and Beaver settled their controversy on July 29, 1926 (Ex. 1, R. 4205, 450). The settlement agreement involved the cash payment by Beaver of $250,000 and the granting by USG to Beaver of a license to use the Utzman closed-edge patent and some sixty or more other patents and applications for patents involved in the manufacture of gypsum board. Although price control extended only to the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent on August 6, 1929, the license agreement continued under all the other patents until February 10, 1937, the expiration date of another Utzman patent covering the machine for manufacturing closed-edge board.

In describing the reasons of Beaver for settling its litigation with USG and taking a license, Blagden testified (R. 874-875, 880):

> "Well, we had lost the patent suit on two occasions, that is, we had lost our case with the United States Gypsum Company on two occasions, and after studying the situation deeply I felt that we would lose in a higher court, and if we could possibly get together and settle the matter it would be best to do so.

"Q. And were you concerned, and was it a reason for your decision to take a license, about the contingent liability which was constantly hanging over the company's head by way of liability for damages?

"A. Yes, sir."

"We only wanted to make the one board, and that was the closed-edge board, and that is why we signed the agreement."

Shortly after the decision against Beaver in August, 1925, USG instituted suits against American (R. 694), and Universal (Ex. 2, R. 4226, 450), for infringement of USG's closed-edge patents and served a notice of infringement upon Niagara (R. 546-547, FF. 7, R. 4135). In an effort to meet the demands of the trade for the closed-edge product and to develop a board to compete with USG's product, American developed a modified closed-edge board made by Clark, the superintendent of the American plant (R. 480-482). On July 31, 1920, Clark filed an application for a patent covering this type of board, but a patent application for a similar type had been previously filed on January 2, 1920, by Birdsey of USG (R. 481). The Birdsey patent was issued on November 9, 1920, and on May 10, 1921, an interference between the Birdsey patent and the Clark application was instituted (R. 481). There ensued a bitter contest in the Patent Office and in the Courts which resulted in the award of priority to Birdsey by the Commissioner of Patents and the ultimate affirmance of this decision by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on February 1, 1926 (R. 693-696). Thus, in early 1926, American likewise was near the end of its rope in making a closed-edge board.

Universal had been infringing USG's patents. In September, 1926, it settled with USG and entered into a license agreement. The settlement and license in this instance was similar to that made with Beaver except that the lump sum payment covering damages amounted to approximately $35,000 (Ex. 2, R. 4226, 450, FF. 7, R. 4135). The testimony of Holland, President of Universal, makes it clear that Universal regarded closed-edge board as a far superior product to open-edge board (R. 888, 897-898, 932-934).

In March, 1927, Atlantic entered into the manufacture of gypsum board for the first time and requested and obtained a license from USG (R. 710, FF. 7, 62, R. 4135, 4156). Griswold of American testified to the effect that he talked to Fuller and Channing of Atlantic when they asked him for advice as to the necessary equipment for construction of a board manufacturing plant (R. 710-712). Griswold advised Fuller and Channing that closed-edge board was a better product, cheaper to make, and had fewer manufacturing difficulties (R. 712). In October, 1926, he obtained from Mr. Avery and forwarded to Atlantic a copy of the form of license (Exhibits 121, 122, and 123, R. 5275-5277, 563-565) and had nothing further to do with the Atlantic license which was signed some six months later (R. 713).

In April, 1927, Texas took a license from USG. Prior thereto it had equipped its plant to make closed-edge board and USG was threatening to sue if such board were produced (R. 6289). Chism of Texas testified that prior to the license Texas was making an open-edge board which proved to be very unsatisfactory to the trade and caused his company to lose business. The cost of manufacture was high due to peelers and broken edges and the open-edge product was getting increasingly difficult to sell to the trade. Texas knew that the closed-edge board was a patented product and that USG owned other patents on the machine necessary to make it and covering board having special features such as the recessed edge. Texas took the license because it wanted to get the right to make board under USG's patents and, after taking the license, it immediately commenced the manufacture of closed-edge board which is the type of product it has made at all times since (R. 3479-3481).

These are the essential facts surrounding the first four license agreements. The Government, however, stresses a number of exhibits, all declarations received subject to proof of conspiracy by evidence aliunde the declarations, which in the last analysis prove nothing more than that many people in the industry were interested in and talking about licenses.

Great emphasis is placed by the Government on Ex. 185 (R. 5338, 814), a memorandum written in December, 1925, by Blagden's attorney (R. 813) and setting forth various possible results which might follow from the USG-Beaver litigation (Gov. brief, pp. 17-19, 207-208). Many of the possibilities which are mentioned in the memorandum are predicated upon a reversal of the decision in favor of USG by the Circuit Court of Appeals. The memorandum concludes with the alternative of a settlement and license, pointing out that this would be the most advantageous course for USG to pursue because Beaver would acknowledge the validity of USG's patents, pay damages and royalties, use its best endeavors to induce other manufacturers to accept licenses, and permit USG to control prices and take a dominating position in the industry.

The evidence shows that Exhibit 185 played no part whatsoever in the settlement negotiations of Beaver and USG, and was of no consequence in any other connection. It was not even in existence on the date of the conference at which Avery set forth USG's terms for settlement which were ultimately accepted by Beaver (R. 813, 871). The document was obviously prepared in an effort to enhance Beaver's bargaining position but it is predicated in large part on an unexplained weakness of USG's position in the Circuit Court of Appeals—obviously a poor argument since, as we have noted, the same Court of Appeals had previously sustained USG's position in substantially the same case. Blagden was reluctant to send the memorandum to Avery because he did not think it presented an argument which would appeal to him (R. 788, 870-871). There is no suggestion that this Blagden memorandum was ever seen or its contents discussed by any other persons in the industry. Blagden testified that he did not discuss with Avery the matter of all companies settling disputes and taking licenses (R. 800-801).

The Government criticizes (Brief p. 20) the Trial Court because it failed specifically to mention one phrase in summarizing Exhibit 185 in its opinion. Sufficient answer to this criticism is that the Trial Court thoroughly considered the exhibit as a whole. This particular exhibit was 14 pages long. It is ridiculous to contend that the omission of one phrase in a summary of the exhibit is error. Furthermore, the Trial Court properly considered the exhibit in the light of Blagden's testimony regarding it, hereinbefore referred to.

The Government also criticizes a statement in the Trial Court's opinion that Blagden testified that he did not discuss with Avery the matter of all companies settling disputes and taking licenses (Gov. brief, p. 20). The basis of this criticism is an involved argument that the witness really said he did not remember having had such discussions rather than that they did not occur. We submit that the argument is based on a distinction without a difference. In any event, the record fully supports the precise statement contained in the Trial Court's opinion (R. 800-801).

It seems to be the Government's purpose to convince the Court that at or about the time his company settled its litigation and took a license, Blagden talked from time to time with other members of the industry on the subject of settlement and license. But that establishes nothing. Beaver was the "guinea pig" of the industry and all the other companies were interested to know what it was doing in connection with its litigation concerning gypsum board (R. 790, 874). Naturally all members of the industry were comparing notes on their common predicament of being caught as infringers. Blagden answered inquiries by others as to what was happening between his company and USG and, having determined that settlement was the best thing for his own company, of course he recommended that the others would be better off with a license agreement than with a lawsuit for infringement (R. 790, 844, 860, 862, 874-876).

The Government conceives Exhibit 185 to be the commencement of its alleged conspiracy, and argues that from that point on, Blagden and Avery were joined in an unlawful concert of action (Gov. brief, pp. 17-19). The argument is inconsistent with another proposition of the Government, i.e., that the motivation for the conspiracy was the great need for price stabilization (Gov. brief, pp. 53-55). But prices were admittedly stable in 1925 and 1926 when gypsum board was selling at $30 per 1000 square feet, a higher price than has existed ever since (R. 480, 571, FF. 88, R. 4161). The fact of the matter is that there is abundant evidence that Blagden had no deal with Avery to promote license agreements. His company settled its lawsuit and took a license without any consideration whatever as to what the other companies in the industry might do on the subject (R. 874). Blagden had nothing to do with the later licenses, of Universal in September, 1926, Atlantic in March, 1927, and Texas in April, 1927 (R. 875-876). Blagden left the gypsum industry early in 1928 (R. 777, 878). All of the foregoing considerations amply support a finding that there was no concerted action between Blagden of Beaver and Avery of USG (FF. 37, R. 4150).

The Trial Court found that Blagden did not act, nor was he told to act, as agent or emissary for USG or Avery in obtaining license agreements and that the Avery-Blagden discussions involved only the settlement of the USG-Beaver infringement litigation (FF. 37, R. 4150). The findings are amply supported by the evidence and the Government assigned no error as to them (R. 4178-4186).

In its discussion of alleged facts, the Government stresses the circumstance that in connection with the Beaver settlement and license, Beaver transferred to USG a number of patents and patent applications bearing on the closed-edge type of board (Gov. brief, p. 22). This was a normal incident of the final settlement of all controversies between the two companies in respect of the infringement litigation. It is sufficient to note that during the trial the Government expressly stated that it did not contend that there was anything wrong or unlawful about this transfer of patents (R. 817, 3911-3913).

From what has been said concerning Blagden, it is improper for the Government to contend that "Blagden continued his efforts to induce other manufacturers of board to become licensees, as he stated he would do in Exhibit 185" (Gov. brief, p. 24). Blagden engaged in no efforts to induce others to become licensees (R. 819). Nor did he state that he would do this, or anything else, in Exhibit 185, which merely lists a number of alternatives none of which was shown to have been acted upon.

After the settlement and license between Beaver and USG, Blagden wrote to Avery in a light vein on the occasion of paying Beaver's first month's royalties. Avery replied that he assumed that Blagden's comment about the payments hurting was playful. In turn, Blagden wrote:

> "You are right—my comment was entirely a playful one. I sincerely believe that the arrangement agreed upon by our two companies will work out to the mutual advantage of both. I feel that the 'entente cordiale' that has started between our companies is only a beginner and that if we play the game right, it should bring about big things" (Ex. 189, R. 5349, 838).

This obviously is a statement that if the settlement and license are lived up to in good faith it will be for the benefit of both companies. But the Government seizes upon the phrase last quoted and the testimony of Blagden that he meant "stabilizing prices in the industry" as evidencing an unlawful combination (Gov. brief, pp. 24-25). But again the Government neglects to give the Court the full story. In connection with this subject, Blagden's prior direct testimony with respect to Exhibit 189 reads (R. 837-838):

> "Q. In the second paragraph of that letter, you state: 'I feel that the entente cordiale that has been started between our companies is only the beginning, and that if we play the game right it should bring about big things.' Do you see that, sir?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did you mean by that?

"A. Well, that all our bickering and squabbling and fighting was over, and that from there on everything ought to be all right.

"Q. What did you mean by 'entente cordiale'?

"A. The friendship between the two companies.

"Q. Were the companies friendly before that, or not?

"A. No, sir..

"Q. They weren't friendly?

"A. We hadn't been.

"Q. And what did you mean by 'playing the game right'?

"A. Living up to the agreement.

"Q. That is, obeying the published prices of USG?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, at that time, how many companies had taken out a license with USG?

"A. I don't remember; I was only referring to our own arrangement."

and his subsequent testimony reads (R. 876-877):

"Q. On page 1608 of your testimony, the part which was read to you this morning, and particularly beginning at line 11, all in reference to Exhibit 189, which is your letter to Mr. Avery of October 1, 1926, this question and answer appear:

'Q. And what did you mean by "playing the game right"?

'A. Living up to the agreement.'

"Isn't it a fact that in that answer, when you used the word 'agreement', you meant license agreement?

"A. That is right.

"Q. Now wasn't your use of the phrase 'entente cordiale', in the third sentence of the second paragraph of that letter, merely your expression of the better feeling that might result, probably would result, from the settlement and license which you had taken?

"A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

"Q. You felt, didn't you, Mr. Blagden, that your company should live up to the agreement?

"A. Absolutely."

The foregoing testimony fully justifies the Trial Court's statement concerning Exhibit 189 and the "entente cordiale" that Blagden testified that the "bickering and squabbling and fighting" which had been going on between Beaver and USG was over upon the signing of the license agreement, and that the two companies were again friendly, that the phrase "entente cordiale" was merely his expression in respect of the better feeling that probably would result from the settlement and license and by the phrase "if we play the game right" he meant living up to the license agreement and obeying the published price of USG and in this respect he was referring only to Beaver's agreement with USG (R. 4111).

The greater part of the Government's statement of alleged facts for this period has to do with the testimony and writings of Griswold of American (Gov. brief, pp. 20-22, 25-40). The substance of such evidence is that Griswold discussed the matter of a license with a number of gypsum manufacturers and recommended that they settle their infringement litigation with USG and take licenses (R. 690-691, 695-697, 701, 702, 704-705, 713, 719). The reasons for Griswold's activity are readily understandable. He recognized the value of the closed-edge product from the time when his company first started the manufacture of gypsum board in 1919 and always wanted to make it (R. 478, 480, 570, 575). At that time he had tried unsuccessfully to get a license from USG (R. 478-480). During the next seven years his company carried on a bitter litigation with USG in the Patent Office and in the courts on the Clark-Birdsey interference and in connection with USG's infringement suit (R. 480-482, 485-487, 642). The adverse decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in February, 1926, impressed upon Griswold the need for making a settlement with USG for, as of that time, American had the choice of making the peace with USG or of manufacturing an inferior type of open-edge board (R. 694-695).

During this period Griswold was working on a merger of his company and most or all of the other manufacturers except USG (R. 568-570, 632-633). The evidence is clear that at all times the thing which was uppermost in Griswold's mind was the success of his merger and continual reference is made to the subject throughout his correspondence (R. 568, 618-619, 632-633, 685-686, 691, 703, 710, 714-716, 717-719, 724-725, 727, 728-729). Neither Avery nor USG had anything to do with the promotion of this venture (R. 703). Griswold of course knew that his plan of merger could not be consummated with outstanding infringement suits and the existence of a very real possibility of judgments for infringement damages against many or all of the constitutent companies (R. 568-569). Griswold's firm conviction that a gypsum board manufacturer had to make closed-edge board in order to continue in business made it imperative that he remain in a position to obtain a license for his merged company. In addition, Griswold was not without hope that he might get special concessions in connection with USG's claim against his own company by giving Avery the impression that he was promoting USG's interests (R. 687). Griswold testified unequivocally, however, that at no time was he an agent or emissary of Avery's in trying to get other companies to take a license (R. 691).

It is in the light of this background that the testimony and writings of Griswold are to be considered. In May of 1926 there was a discussion among several gypsum board manufacturers of the matter of settling the claims of USG and taking licenses (R. 520-521). Griswold said that the discussion had to do with what would face the manufacturers if USG finally won the pending infringement suits and the serious position in which such an eventuality would place all companies concerned. All realized that if they had to manufacture only an open-edge type of board, they would be up against a serious handicap in carrying on their business (R. 525).

The subject of the foregoing meeting is discussed in Exhibit 104, a letter of May 12, 1926, from Griswold to the President of his company (R. 5260, 514). This was a document received in evidence subject to the declarations rule. The Government stresses a remark in that letter that "According to the plans we have we figure that there is a possibility of us holding the price steady on wallboard for the next fourteen or fifteen years which means much to the industry" (Gov. brief, p. 21). Griswold explained that at the time he thought that the Utzman patent had fourteen or fifteen years to run and he assumed that if licenses were taken USG would fix prices under that patent and that, as a result of legal price-fixing, the price of wallboard would remain fairly stationary during the life of the patent (R. 513, 701). Therefore it is clear that Griswold was not talking about a plan in the sense of a common program agreed upon by the parties. Moreover, Griswold's reference in the same letter that Blagden had talked with Avery "on the matter of settling all disputes and litigations between the wallboard manufacturers by entering into a licensing arrangement" was denied by Blagden who also stated that he did not discuss any plan for "holding the price steady on wallboard for the next fourteen or fifteen years" (R. 800-801).

Among the writings of Griswold[48] relied on by the Government, all admitted in evidence subject to the declarations rule, are Exhibits 106 and 107, an exchange of letters between Griswold and Avery, dated June 2, 1926, and July 6, 1926, respectively (R. 5262-5263, 543, 546). Griswold refers to a meeting with Haggerty of National, states that Blagden told him that a draft of license was being prepared, requests a copy of the form of contract for forwarding to Texas, and states that it would be nice if a copy of the form of contract could be available on the occasion of the next meeting of the trade association of the industry. Avery acknowledges Griswold's letter and mentions that the negotiations for the settlement and license between USG and Beaver are progressing.

In connection with these exhibits Griswold testified that he had mentioned the possibility of a license to Haggerty of [48] It is a commentary on the Government's case that Griswold, who is supposed to have lined up all the members of the industry, could not even convince his own company to take a license.

National (which was just about entering the field of gypsum board manufacture) because he hoped that that company would be a part of his merger (R. 718, FF. 9, R. 4137). He also wanted to send the form of license to Texas since Texas was to be part of the merger (R. 545, 702). To the extent that Griswold's letter states that Haggerty was "sold on the proposition", Griswold's comment is on the exaggerated side. National, in fact, became an infringer and did not take a license until May, 1929, when it settled and paid damages of $178,000 (FF. 9, R. 4137).

The Government relies on Exhibits 121 and 122 (R. 5275-5277, 563, 564), an exchange of letters between Griswold and Avery, dated October 9, 1926, and October 11, 1926, respectively. Griswold mentions a meeting with Fuller and Channing of Atlantic, newcomers to the gypsum business. He reports favorably on his opinion of these men, refers to a discussion with them on the advisability of taking a license and suggests that a copy of the form of license be sent to them. Avery, in reply, sends a copy of the form of license to Griswold for forwarding to Fuller and Channing, pointing out that he (Avery) has not met these gentlemen. As we have pointed out, Griswold testified that Fuller and Channing had consulted him on the subject of the necessary equipment for building a gypsum board plant and, at the time, he recommended that they try to obtain a license (R. 712). Except for the forwarding of a form of license to Fuller in October, 1926, mentioned in these exhibits, Griswold had nothing further to do with the Atlantic license which was not made until six months later, in March, 1927 (R. 712-713). On this state of the evidence the Trial Court necessarily concluded that Griswold had nothing to do with the Atlantic license except as stated (R. 4038). The statement in the Trial Court's opinion to this effect is clearly correct, rather than clearly erroneous as asserted by the Government (Gov. brief, p. 27).

Exhibits 123 through 135, inclusive, are letters between Griswold and Avery in the fall of 1926, and the early part of 1927, and Exhibit 191 is a related letter from Avery to Blagden dated October 19, 1926 (R. 5278-5287, 5351, 565-567, 582-587, 590-591, 840). These exhibits are discussed on pages 28-33 of the Government's brief. The net result of all this correspondence is that Griswold discussed the matter of a license agreement with various gypsum board manufacturers, that some of the companies (including his own) told Griswold that they were not satisfied with the license offered and that USG refused to make any concessions whatsoever from the terms of settlement and license which had been given to Beaver and Universal. The Government emphasizes a statement in Exhibit 123, Griswold's letter to Avery of October 15, 1926, that a meeting of board manufacturers might be held "with the object in view of getting united action on this matter" (R. 5278) (Gov. brief, p. 28). This expresses merely a pious hope on Griswold's part and, plus the fact that the contemplated meeting admittedly was never held, negatives the Government's claim that there actually was united action (R. 714). Indeed the Government itself admits that whatever ideas, if any, Griswold or Blagden might have had about united or concerted action failed to materialize (Gov. brief, p. 30).

In Exhibit 132, Griswold's letter to Avery dated January 3, 1927, Griswold states that he "started out to deliver 100 percent of the manufacturers of board that would be willing to sign up on a license arrangement" (R. 5285). Obviously, Griswold never achieved that result.

Nor does the letter establish that Griswold had any arrangement with Avery to promote licenses. The Government concedes that Griswold stated that he was not asked by Avery to contact other manufacturers and that he had no agreement with Avery to do so (Gov. brief, p. 26). And he emphatically denied that he was an agent or emissary of Avery's. He testified (R. 691):

> "Q. During any of this period did you act as agent or emissary of Mr. Avery?
>
> "A. No, I did not.
>
> "Q. Did you have any agreement or understanding with him that you were going out to act for him?
>
> "A. Not for Mr. Avery or for the United States Gypsum Company.
>
> "Q. Did you have any agreement with Mr. Blagden, or anyone else, that you were going out and act for him or anyone else?
> "A. No, I did not. As I remember it, I had never met Mr. Blagden until that first meeting, May 12, I think it was, the date mentioned in the correspondence."

The Trial Court found that Griswold did not act, nor was he told to act, as agent or emissary of USG or Avery in obtaining license agreements and that any interest by Griswold in the settlement of litigation in the industry was motivated by concern for his own company and the merger he was promoting (FF. 37; R. 4150). The finding is not only amply supported by the evidence but the Government assigned no error with respect to it (see R. 4178-4186).

Griswold further testified that there was never any agreement among the companies as to what should or should not be done with respect to the license (R. 720). The Government's assertion that Griswold's statement to the effect that Avery insisted on industry-wide licenses (Gov. brief, p. 26) is plainly wrong since the facts show any company could take the license or leave it as it saw fit. The very fact that the licenses were signed at different times over a period of four years is refutation of the Government's statement.

From time to time Griswold mentions Texas in his letters but, except for forwarding a draft of a form of license to Texas, he had nothing to do with that company's license with USG (R. 636, 723-726). Griswold contemplated that Texas would be part of his merger (R. 660) and that proposition is the main subject matter of correspondence between Griswold and Gloyd of Texas, illustrated by Exhibits 149 to 158 (R. 5299-5307, 630-632, 634-638). This correspondence clearly shows that Texas was not a party to any general arrangement to blanket the industry with licenses, but that it went ahead on its own initiative and took a license in April, 1927, completely without regard to what other companies were doing.

Griswold also mentions Niagara in his correspondence. He testified that he arranged a meeting between Reeb of Niagara and Avery, so that their differences might be adjusted. Griswold felt responsible for the claim for infringement which USG asserted against Niagara, because Niagara had manufactured a modified closed-edge board under the Clark method which Griswold had licensed Niagara to use (R. 546-547). Furthermore, Niagara was to be part of Griswold's proposed merger (R. 568, 618, 660, 724).

Throughout all of the foregoing the position of USG is clear and consistent, as appears from Avery's letters to Griswold. On November 22, 1926, Avery wrote (Ex. 129, R. 5283, 586):

> "Your letter of the sixteenth I find on my return to the office. I appreciate your efforts with the other board manufacturers. I understand your statement of their position, and regret that we have no alternative to offer. * * *"

On December 30, 1926, Avery wrote (Ex. 131, R. 5284, 587):

> "As the attempts made to adjust the differences between us relating to the plaster-board edge seem to have exhausted themselves without result, I am writing to advise you that we hereby withdraw the proposal made to you in this connection."

The proposal referred to was an offer of a settlement and license to American.

Finally, on February 2, 1927, Avery wrote (Ex. 134, R. 5287, 590):

> "Yours of the thirty-first is at hand. I think our conversations and the correspondence we have had on the patent matter have made clear the company's position on this subject. I gather from your communication that the position of the wall board interests with whom you have conferred is of the nature indicated in your former letters. While I should be very pleased to see you and to discuss this matter, I can hold out no encouragement to you for any change in our position."

These letters alone establish beyond question that Avery and USG were not parties to any plans, schemes, or combinations of any kind. Obviously if there had been a common program to violate the law Avery would never have said, upon being advised of objections of the various companies to the form of the license, "we have no alternative to offer." Nor, assuming a scheme or combination, would Avery have replied: "I can hold out no encouragement to you for any change in our position." The Government asserts that these letters of Avery did not close the door to further negotiations (Gov. brief, p. 34), but no evidence is given in support of the statement and the fact is that Griswold left the industry shortly thereafter when his merger program failed.

One final word on Griswold. The Government refers to his testimony that it would be natural that when a company signed a license they would manufacture the superior patented product which would have a tendency to eliminate other boards from the market which had been put out only to create a disturbance (R. 574). This is no more than a statement that certain normal economic consequences will undoubtedly follow from the execution of a license agreement. Obviously it is not in conflict with the Trial Court's finding on ample evidence that there were no informal side agreements between USG and any of its licensees to discontinue the manufacture of open-edge board or seconds (FF. 56, R. 4154).

We submit that the foregoing evidence fully supports the Trial Court's finding that there was no common program to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices (FF. 118, R. 4167). Up to this point, Blagden had settled and taken a license and recommended when asked that others do likewise. His company sold out to Certain-teed which was to renew the litigation with USG. Blagden had left the industry. Griswold had favored a license but he could not even convince his own company to take one. Avery at all times was willing to settle with infringers and grant licenses on the original terms but also at all times he was unyielding toward demands for special concessions. In addition to Beaver, some companies took licenses, Universal, Texas and Atlantic. Neither Blagden nor Griswold promoted those licenses. They were taken because the respective companies wanted to use USG's patents. There was no concerted action whatsoever.

The Government contends (Gov. brief, pp. 200-207) that it has supplied adequate proof of conspiracy simply by showing that in 1925 Blagden had discussions with Avery on the subject of settlement of the Beaver litigation and a license, that USG and Beaver settled their litigation and signed a license, that Blagden recommended when asked that other companies do likewise,[49] that Griswold expressed the view that a license would have a stabilizing effect on the industry, and that Griswold talked to Avery and tried but failed "to get united action." It is this evidence which the Government contends establishes that Blagden, Avery and Griswold "were associated together in a 'plan' to bring about industry-wide licensing with price control" and asserts that all declarations may now be examined as original evidence under the rule of the Hitchman case (Gov. brief, p. 207). It is plain, we submit, that the evidence fails to show any common arrangement among Blagden, Avery, Griswold or anyone else to do anything.

[49]The Government flagrantly misstates the evidence at p. 203 of its brief. Blagden testified that in talking to George M. Brown of Certain-teed he mentioned price stabilization as one of the benefits of a license agreement and that by price stabilization he meant the benefit of the license price which would be the same price (R. 831). The Government asserts that Bladgen told in substance the same thing to the other members of the industry. Blagden's testimony is directly to the contrary (R. 827-832). When Government counsel sought to have him so testify he denied the proposition pointing out that "You must remember that we were selling the company to Mr. Brown." (R. 832)

1928 and early 1929

At the beginning of 1928, Certain-teed purchased the assets of Beaver and refused to assume the Beaver-USG settlement agreement and license (FF. 9, 4136). As a result USG instituted suit in the Federal District Court in Chicago against Certain-teed and Beaver in which an injunction was sought against the distribution of the proceeds of sale to the Beaver stockholders and in which USG asserted that Certain-teed should be required to assume all liabilities of Beaver under its settlement agreement and license (Ex. 323, R. 5876, 1499, FF. 9, R. 4136.) In a preliminary proceeding Certain-teed was required to put up a million dollar bond as security for damages which might be found due to USG and George M. Brown, President of Certain-teed, and Elisha Walker, one of its directors, were personal guarantors on the bond (Exs. 325-327, R. 5951-5953, 1506, 1450).

In connection with the purchase by Certain-teed of the assets of Beaver, George M. Brown testified that the question arose as to whether Certain-teed should continue the manufacture of closed-edge board in the Beaver plants (R. 1437). Blagden of Beaver had urged that Certain-teed should carry out the Beaver agreement with USG and recommended that Certain-teed should assume the Beaver-USG license (R. 877-879). Blagden arranged a meeting between George M. Brown and Avery on February 29, 1928, for the purpose of trying to work out an arrangement whereby Certain-teed would assume the Beaver license (Exs. 195, 196, R. 5353-5354, 844, 1442). Avery and Brown were unable to arrive at any agreement (R. 1438-1442). At this time George M. Brown felt, contrary to the views of others in the Certain-teed organization, C. O.

Brown (R. 1222-1223), Whittemore (R. 1398-1399), Nelson (R. 1475, 1490), that Certain-teed could continue successfully in the gypsum board industry with an open-edge board, but he later became convinced that it was necessary for Certain-teed to make the closed-edge product (R. 1440, 1446-1447, 1455-1456).

The Government's discussion of alleged facts gives the erroneous impression that statements made and letters written in connection with the sale of Beaver to Certain-teed and the resumption of the litigation with USG were applicable to the industry generally (Gov. brief, 41-55, 203). For example, we have already noted that one of the benefits of a license which Blagden mentioned to George M. Brown was a more stable price (supra, p. 110). Blagden testified that this statement was made in connection with the sale of the Beaver company to Mr. Brown and was not a topic which he discussed with other members of the industry (R. 830, 832).

The meeting of Blagden, Brown and Avery on February 29, 1928, resulted from an attempt by Blagden to settle the controversies between Certain-teed, as Beaver's successor, and USG, and was not part of any program of concerted action in the gypsum industry. On the contrary, it appears that concerted action was probably the thought which was most remote in the minds of the parties (R. 1438-1440, 1450, 1463). The effort at settling the differences of the parties failed and George M. Brown, obviously in the heat of controversy, composed Exhibit 212, a document heavily relied upon by the Government (Gov. brief, pp. 41-43, Ex. 212, R. 5376, 1485). In this memorandum Brown stated that at a meeting "yesterday", USG insisted upon a license agreement running until 1937, but that Certain-teed was only willing to take the license until the expiration of the "main patent", in 1929. The memorandum further states that open-edge board can be sold although it is recognized that trade will be lost by the manufacturer of the open-edge type product. Reference is made to the suit instituted by USG and it is stated that the action should be defended and an answer filed alleging that the suit was commenced "not in the interest of royalties but for the sole purpose of trade domination, monopoly and price control".

The Government also relies on Exhibit 324 (R. 5916, 1499), a copy of the unverified answer of Certain-teed filed in the USG suit containing several conclusional allegations that the USG license is in violation of the anti-trust law (Gov. brief, pp. 42-43). This document was received in evidence only as a possible admission on the part of Certain-teed and not as binding on any other defendant in the case (R. 1499, 1503, 1505). Obviously neither the answer nor the memorandum is in furtherance of any common purpose so that the documents would not be binding on other defendants under the declarations rule. However, the documents do not aid the Government's case. In the first place, they disprove rather than prove concerted action. In the second place they recognize in accord with the contentions of defendants that closed-edge board is a superior product demanded by the trade and that business would be lost if the manufacturer was unable to make it. The references to USG's interest in trade domination, monopoly and price control are mere conclusions, and were unquestionably prompted by the over-zealous sentiments of George M. Brown faced with USG's substantial claim for damages. It is clear that these conclusional allegations were made solely for the purpose of the lawsuit. Brown expressly states in Exhibit 212 that Certain-teed would be willing to take a license until 1929 (R. 5376-5377). It is inconsistent for him to argue in the same breath that such a license is unlawful and unenforcible. Moreover, in May, 1929, Certain-teed settled its lawsuit with USG and signed a license agreement (FF. 9, R. 4136-4137). Consequently, as the Trial Court concluded (R. 4044, FF. 40, R. 4151), the only reasonable inference is that Certain-teed ultimately reached the conclusion that its statements concerning USG were erroneous.

The Government in its brief (pp. 44-46) quotes at length from a Griswold letter dated April 12, 1928, to the president of his company, which of course is a declaration, containing an implication that Griswold brought about license agreements between USG and Beaver, Universal, Texas and Atlantic (Ex. 141, 5292, 605). Griswold conceded that any such implication was not in accord with the facts (R. 719). The letter also mentions that Avery told Griswold that USG would drop its suit against Certain-teed if Certain-teed would carry out the Beaver license. That establishes nothing for the very purpose of the lawsuit was to compel Certain-teed to assume the Beaver agreement. The observation of Griswold at the concluding part of this letter that the plaster market would never be straightened up or stabilized so long as the board market remains as it is, does not prove a combination to accomplish stabilization. At this time, prices in the industry had become very low with the result that many companies were selling board and other products below cost (R. 664-665, 902-903, 966, 1388). Griswold firmly believed that the reason for the low prices which were driving many companies toward bankruptcy was the litigation, dissension and bad feeling throughout the industry (R. 663-664, 721-722). His remark, as well as his testimony, that a stable price on board would undoubtedly improve plaster prices (R. 622) was but the statement of an economic truism.

In 1928, Holland became president of Universal and immediately commenced a struggle to keep that company out of bankruptcy (R. 887, 896, 961-962, 966-967). Holland, like Griswold, attributed the chaotic conditions in the industry to the litigation and dissension (R. 966). Since the future of his company was seriously endangered by such conditions, Holland sought in the fall of 1928 to bring about better conditions by formulating fair trade practice rules for the members of the industry under Federal Trade Commission guidance (R. 911-913, 969-971). Another method in which he sought to save his company from bankruptcy was through an attempted merger of various small manufacturers, such proposal having been promoted by Blair & Company, bankers (R. 896, 967-969). Moreover, Holland sought to clear up the litigation in the industry and frankly testified that he would have liked to have all companies make a closed-edge product which was a better product (R. 897-898, 935, 966).

It is the Government's theory that Holland took up the alleged program to blanket the industry with license agreements and stabilize prices as the emissary of USG (Gov. brief, pp. 55-61; 210-213). Holland emphatically denied this contention (R. 971):

> "Q. Now is it true, Mr. Holland, that either at that time or any other time you were a representative of USG?
> * * * * * * *
> "A. No.

"Q. And did you ever agree, or have an understanding with USG or anyone in that company that you would promote any plan looking toward the licensing of all the industry under price-fixing agreements?

"A. No, sir."

As indicative of the lack of any concerted action between Holland and Avery, the latter being the one whose efforts the Government would have this Court believe were primarily responsible for the consummation of the alleged agreement to blanket the industry with licenses and price-fixing, Mr. Holland stated (R. 971-972):

"Q. Isn't it a fact that on such occasions as you talked with Mr. Avery in 1928 and 1929, you found him somewhat disinclined to discuss the matter of settlement and the license * * *?

"The Witness. He was a very hard man to reach, he rather ignored me most of the time in my efforts to bring about a discussion."

The Government's reliance on letters of Holland (all declarations) as establishing group action is unwarranted (Gov. brief, pp. 48-50). Holland's letters such as Exhibits 145 and 147 merely show that he was interested only in resolving the differences between the various non-licensee companies in litigation with USG in the hope that the cessation of litigation would bring about better conditions (Exs. 145, 147, R. 5296, 5298, 627, 638). It appears that in the latter part of 1928 Holland met with representatives of non-licensee companies and urged the other companies to settle their litigation and pay their infringement damages and take licenses (Ex. 203, R. 5367, 1331). However, nothing came of that advice (R. 1356-1358).

The Government criticizes the Trial Court's summary of Exhibit 204, a letter of Holland to Haggerty dated January 7, 1929, concerning the reluctance of Kling of American to do anything to settle its litigation with USG (Gov. brief, p. 55; Ex. 204, R. 5369, 936). Holland complains that Kling is inconsiderate for not letting anyone know what he proposes to do so that the others could be governed accordingly. The Trial Court summarizes this letter stating that "Holland wrote Haggerty of National that an effort should be made to hold another meeting of those interested in the board situation; that American cannot hope to gain by delaying the settlement because this will demoralize prices throughout 1929" (R. 4103). We submit that the Trial Court's summary was fair particularly in view of Holland's testimony that he hoped that other board manufacturers would take out a closed-edge license and that he urged the various board manufacturers to do so. (R. 900-901, 932-935). All of this evidence stresses the lack of a joint program.

Haggerty's letter to Holland of January 9, 1929 (Ex. 205, R. 5370, 937), points out that the price control provision of the existing licenses was operative only until the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent on August 9, 1929, whereas the license agreement ran until February, 1937, the date of the expiration of the Utzman patent on the machine for making closed-edge board. The Government complains that the Trial Court failed to mention in its summary of Holland's reply (Ex. 206, R. 5371, 943), the statement that Avery made it clear "that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available", and a further statement that Holland is "quite sure that Avery would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included" (Gov. brief, p. 59). Neither of these references supports an inference that there was any concerted action to license the industry and stabilize prices.[50] The use of the word "plan" in Exhibit 206 does not evidence concert of action. On pages 59-60 of its brief the Government seizes upon the word as creating an irresistible inference that there was a combination for the industry to take out licenses and stabilize prices. But the use of the word "plan" by Holland does not establish concerted action or combination. What the Government set out to prove was a "common plan" (Gov. brief, p. 200) which is substantially different from a single person's "plan" or idea which is the sense the word was used in Holland's letter (R. 939-940). The Government erroneously argues that the specific proposition that Holland favored other manufacturers taking licenses establishes the general proposition that all defendants were engaged "in a conspiracy to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices as charged" (Gov. brief, p. 60). The statement in Exhibit 206 that Holland felt quite sure that Avery "would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included" is on its face an opinion of Avery's state of mind and, as events show, was wrong in point of fact.

[50]To the extent that this letter suggests an understanding that price control would be continued after the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent, all witnesses testified that there was no such understanding (Griswold, R. 701), (Holland, R. 966), (C. O. Brown, R. 1231), (Whittemore, R. 1400-1401), (George Brown, R. 1463, 1465), (Lenci, R. 2973-2974). The Government's suggestion on page 61 of its brief that Griswold was the only witness who denied having any understanding with Avery or anyone else that price control would be extended under some patent after the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent is therefore entirely unwarranted.

The evidence is clear that Holland, like Griswold, recognized that the litigation and dissension caused by the infringement of USG's rights were demoralizing the industry and rapidly causing the smaller companies to go into bankruptcy. Holland, like Griswold, knew that the closed-edge board was a superior product. He was also interested in the settlement of disputes and the taking of licenses, as in the case of Griswold, by reason of his connection with a second merger proposal. His activity in no way establishes concerted action to take licenses and stabilize prices, in fact, like the evidence concerning Griswold, it emphasizes the great lack of unanimity and the absence of concerted activity from which a combination or conspiracy could be inferred.

The Trial Court found that Holland did not act, nor was he told to act as agent or emissary of USG or Avery in obtaining license agreements and that any interest by Holland in the settlement of litigation in the industry was motivated by concern for his own company and the merger he was promoting (FF. 37; R. 4150). The finding is amply supported by the evidence and the Government assigned no error with respect to it (R. 4178-4186).

The May, 1929 Licenses

The litigation throughout the industry still prevailed in 1929. USG's infringement suit against American had been tried in 1928 resulting in a judgment in favor of USG. This prompted renewed efforts on the part of American to settle but all of these efforts involved requests for special concessions which USG refused to give.

As noted above, Niagara had manufactured an infringing board on the advice of American. Although suit had not yet been instituted notice of infringement and a substantial claim for damages had been served on that company. USG's two infringement suits against National were approaching trial. The action to compel Certain-teed to assume the obligations of the Beaver license had not been settled. Ebsary was the only non-licensee company which had avoided infringement litigation by attempting to sell open-edge board with unsatisfactory results (R. 2790).

On May 16, 1929, National settled its litigation and signed a license. This involved a payment of damages for infringement of $178,000 (FF. 9, R. 4137). On the following day Baker of National telegraphed Avery that the license had been executed and mailed (Ex. 716, R. 6521, 3829). The telegram also stated that Reeb of Niagara was ready and that Baker was working with Ebsary with hope of everybody being set by Saturday to justify a meeting of all board makers. This telegram negatives concert of action for National signed its license and sent it to USG, notwithstanding that Niagara and Ebsary admittedly had not signed licenses. It is indeed apparent that Ebsary had not yet indicated an intention to sign. Certainly if there were any substance to the charge that there was a common plan that all companies would take licenses as a group, one prospective licensee would not have signed a license and delivered it unqualifiedly until the others had done likewise, particularly in this industry where there had been years of litigation, dissension and distrust.

These considerations apply as well to the recitals in the minutes of the Board of Directors of National on May 14, 1929 (Ex. 198, R. 5356, 886), stating that all manufacturers of gypsum products, except American, had agreed to sign a license. The Trial Court properly refused to infer that these words evidenced a concerted agreement of all manufacturers to take a license (R. 4116). It can be equally inferred from the language that each manufacturer had individually indicated a willingness to sign a license. The Trial Court's conclusion is the only justifiable one particularly in the light of the testimony of all witnesses that each company took its license without regard to what any other company did (Griswold, R. 720; C. O. Brown, R. 1081-1084; Whittemore, R. 1398-1399, 1404-1406; George M. Brown, R. 1463; Nelson, R. 1491-1492; Lenci, R. 2790-2791, 2793, 2800, 2966-2967, 2968; FF. 37, R. 4150). The Government's argument on page 62 of its brief that the Trial Court failed to consider the National minutes in the light of all the evidence in the case is unwarranted. The Government is arguing in effect that the Court should regard the exhibit in the light only of evidence favorable to the Government without considering the mass of testimony favorable to defendants.

By May 18, 1929, Ebsary, Niagara and Certain-teed had indicated their respective intentions of taking a license and although the record does not contain the circumstances it appears that arrangements were made for these licenses to be signed at or about the same time in Chicago. Representatives of existing licensees and prospective licensees were invited to attend a meeting.

On May 18, 1929, American still was trying to get concessions and these were refused by USG. Accordingly, Avery telegraphed the other companies that there would be no American license and that the meeting would be futile unless the other companies desired to proceed without American. The other companies so elected and accordingly on May 21, 1929, Niagara settled the claim against it for damages for the sum of approximately $28,000 and took a license. On the following day Certain-teed settled its litigation with USG, agreeing to pay damages of approximately $64,000 and to assume the obligations of Beaver under its original settlement agreement and license. Also on May 22, 1929, Ebsary took a license (FF. 9, R. 4136-4137).

In connection with the May licenses, the Government fails to call to this Court's attention the great mass of evidence in the case unequivocally establishing that there was no concert of action in connection with the taking of licenses. Whittemore and George M. Brown of Certain-teed, prior to their trip to Chicago in May of 1929, had decided that Certain-teed would take a license and the trip was for the purpose of working out a deal with USG on all matters, including payment of past royalties on board made at the Beaver plants, cancelation of the million dollar bond in the USG-Certain-teed lawsuit, and the settlement in general of the controversies between the two companies (R. 1398). Whittemore's testimony as to Certain-teed's reasons for taking a license is as follows (R. 1398-1399):

> "Q. Did the decision which you and your president and your management made prior to your going out there, to settle and take a license if you could, have anything to do with any other company in the business, or didn't it?
> "A. No, sir, it did not. We were in enough trouble ourselves without worrying about the other fellow.
>
> "Q. And is it a fact, sir, that your company would have taken a license if it could have gotten it without regard to what any other company did or did not do?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was the attitude of your company and yourself toward whether or not you desired to manufacture the Utzman closed-edge board?

"A. We wanted to make it.

"Q. Will you tell the Court the reasons why you wanted to make it?

"A. Well, there were a number of reasons. The board was a better board than the open-edge board; it was less subject to damage in transit because of the edge coverage by paper; it was easier to manufacture; and it was decidedly more salable.

"Q. Now when you say that it was 'decidedly more salable', do you include in that answer the fact that as of this time, at least, there was a strong customer demand in the trade for closed-edge board?

"A. Yes. If you will let me answer that question in my own may, I think I can get at what you want to develop.

"Q. I wish you would.

"A. The Certain-teed Products Corporation made an open-edge board. At the same time, the Beaver Products were making a closed-edge board; when we took over the Beaver products we immediately discontinued the manufacture of closed-edge board in the Beaver plant, and went to an open-edge board. We found that the customer demand precluded our selling an open-edge board at the same price as the closed-edge board, and prices declined, declined and declined.

"Q. Then would you say that the primary reason for your taking this license from USG was to get the right to manufacture the product covered by the closed-edge patent?

"A. That was one reason, and also to get rid of the possibility of future litigation. You referred to the Utzman patent. The Utzman patent was only one of some fifty to one hundred patents that we were licensed to use. Some of those patents were vital in the production of closed-edge board, and had we not had a blanket license to use all of the patents of USG, we would have been subject to possible litigation, and we wanted to avoid that—we had had plenty."

Notwithstanding the fact that representatives of other companies were in attendance at the meetings, Whittemore positively testified that Certain-teed made its agreement with USG independently (R. 1404). The Certain-teed negotiations were conducted with USG individually and there was no agreement or understanding of any kind among the manufacturers (R. 1406).

George M. Brown, who in large part formulated the policies of Certain-teed (R. 986) was violently opposed to the idea that USG should control the price of Certain-teed on patented board (R. 1222; 1401, 1405, 1439, 1443), and the fact that the Utzman closed-edge patent, under which price control was to be exercised, expired in but a short time, was one of the reasons why he agreed to take the license (R. 1401). Brown testified that Certain-teed, probably from wishful thinking, originally had decided to try to get along with the open-edge board. Due to the demands of the trade and of Certain-teed's sales and manufacturing departments, this viewpoint changed (R. 1455-1456). Certain-teed undoubtedly would have taken a license at an earlier date than May, 1929, if it could have obtained one without price control (R. 1463). Certain-teed's decision to take a license was not in any way dependent on what its competitors did with respect to signing a similar license (R. 1463). In fact, Brown would have preferred that other companies did not have the right to make closed-edge board (R. 1463). Certain-teed opposed price-fixing at all times and finally took the license with a price-fixing provision in it because that was the only basis on which it could be obtained (R. 1464).

In further connection with Certain-teed's decision to take a license, Nelson testified that his company's decision to settle its lawsuit with USG and take a license had nothing to do with what any other company might do (R. 1491). The management of Certain-teed concluded that it was best for the company to take a license and the fact that price-fixing only extended to August, 1929, was a factor which influenced Certain-teed to take a license (R. 1490-1491).

C. O. Brown of Certain-teed testified that his reasons for favoring the May license were to get the right to make closed-edge board and to settle the suit between USG and Certain-teed. Price-fixing did not enter his mind (R. 1081-1084).

The other representative of one of the four companies which signed licenses in May, 1929, who appeared as a witness was Lenci of Ebsary. He testified that in 1928 when Ebsary began to manufacture gypsum board of the open-edge type, it was found that the open-edge board was expensive and wasteful to make (R. 2790, 2964). The Ebsary Company had considered the desirability of making a closed-edge board from the time it entered the board business, but concluded that it would make no attempt to manufacture a closed-edge board without a license because of the outcome of the patent suits instituted by USG against infringers (R. 2967). Lenci's testimony is abundantly clear that the dealer trade was demanding the closed-edge board and he freely admitted that it was extremely difficult to sell open-edge board (R. 2790, 2965).

Prior to going to Chicago in May, 1929, Ebsary had received a draft of license and this had been turned over to its lawyer, Judge Rippey (R. 2790-2791, 2966). Before leaving for Chicago, the Ebsary Company had fully determined to take a license (R. 2790-2791, 2967). Ebsary's primary reason for taking the license was its desire and need to make closed-edge gypsum board (R. 2791, 2800, 2949, 2970). It also wanted to get the benefit of USG's research in the manufacture of board (R. 3082). Ebsary also knew of and desired to use the various patents other than the Utzman closed-edge patent covered by the license, including the machine patent and others which ran for many years after the expiration of the Utzman closed-edge patent in August, 1929 (R. 2791-2792). Ebsary was satisfied that it had to have the right to use many, if not all, of the patents in the license in order to make a satisfactory closed-edge board (R. 2792). Lenci read a summary of the various patents and knew that USG had many patents which Ebsary might infringe if it attempted to make a closed-edge board without a license, even after August, 1929 (R. 2971-2972, 3079-3080).

The conclusion of the Ebsary company to take a license was reached independently and without regard to what other companies might or might not do with respect to the same subject (R. 2800). Lenci never discussed the subject of a license with any other company nor, to his knowledge, had Frederick Ebsary (R. 2968). There was no general agreement or understanding at the May, 1929, meetings, and, so far as Lenci knew, the other prospective licensees had each independently determined to take a license prior to going to Chicago (R. 2968).

In the light of the foregoing testimony the Trial Court could hardly have found otherwise than that each company acted independently and not by concerted action. The Government's argument that this finding is erroneous is frivolous. That argument is based on a partial and misleading quotation from Exhibit 206 (R. 5371, 943) that Avery was not "interested in negotiating settlements until everyone involved was included" (Gov. brief, pp. 59, 66). This quotation is from a Holland letter to Haggerty in which Holland says "I am quite sure that Mr. Avery would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone was included" (R. 5372). As we have noted, Holland was wrong in his conclusion for Avery was willing to and did license any company which agreed to the terms which had been formulated in the original settlement with Beaver. Next, the Government asserts that the meeting in May was "pre-arranged" (Gov. brief, p. 63). However that does not prove nor tend to prove that the licenses were signed by virtue of concerted action. Finally the Government asserts that Avery and everyone else recognized that by bringing the whole industry under licenses it would be possible for the first time to have effective price control (Gov. brief, pp. 66-67). This assertion fails to establish concerted action and, in any event, is neither supported by the record references cited by the Government nor by any other evidence.[51]

[51]Although it originally pleaded that price control immediately followed each license as it was signed (Complaint, par. 66, R. 16), the Government now would have the Court believe that USG did not exercise its right to establish minimum prices on patented gypsum board under the earlier licenses but waited until the May, 1929, licenses were executed (Gov. brief, pp. 72-73, 103). This is contrary to the uncontradicted evidence (R. 789-790, 809-810, 814-815, 841-842).

The Government unsuccessfully attempts to establish that the primary if not the sole purpose of the companies in taking licenses was to get prices raised and stabilized (Gov. brief, p. 68). Its argument relies on (1) testimony of Lenci who agreed with a leading question of Government counsel that it was important for him to get a closed-edge board and also to make sure that price conditions were going to be corrected so that he could make a profit (R. 2971), and (2) testimony of Holland that he was interested in better conditions in the marketability of board so as to help his company and the other manufacturers out of their unfortunate financial situation brought about by the litigation and price war (Gov. brief, p. 68). This evidence by itself does not even justify the conclusion that any of the licensees took licenses with the primary idea of raising and stabilizing prices. Furthermore the mass of evidence that this was not their purpose must also be considered.

The Government makes a similar argument that the licensees signed the licenses with the idea of getting a uniform product because George M. Brown expressed the view that by all companies making a uniform product (i.e. closed-edge board) they would get away from "fierce warfares" and because Holland testified that it would be beneficial to have one kind of board (Gov. brief, p. 69). Such evidence hardly establishes that a dominant motive for the licenses was the desire of all licensees to have a uniform product.

The Government makes much of Lenci's testimony that after the May licenses were executed, USG issued new price bulletins to the licensees covering patented gypsum board (Gov. brief, pp. 70-73), and that in his opinion all of the licensees were human enough to hope that the prices would go up (R. 2973). The prices were of course higher than what Ebsary had been getting since Ebsary had not been selling closed-edge board (R. 2973). The level of the prices was not raised, however, but remained at what USG had been getting for its product (R. 2973). This, we submit, is a strange culmination of a conspiracy to fix prices. No licensee had any idea what the prices would be beyond a hope that they would be better than those prevailing during the price war. There were no understandings or agreements of any kind about the establishment of prices and indeed the subject was not discussed. The great mass of evidence on this point alone establishes the absence of the combination charged.

The evidence is overwhelming that the licenses were not signed pursuant to any agreement to raise prices. Griswold testified that USG would never even discuss what prices it might establish on patented gypsum board under the licenses (R. 624-625, 698-699, 720).

Blagden stated that Beaver never had any understanding or agreement or discussion with Avery as to what minimum prices would be established under the licenses (R. 876).

Holland testified that there were no agreements or understandings between Universal and USG outside of the existing written license agreement (R. 965-966).

C. O. Brown testified that Certain-teed had nothing whatever to do with the establishment of minimum prices under its license and that the establishment of minimum prices for patented board was entirely in USG's discretion (R. 1235).

George M. Brown testified that there never was any understanding or agreement that gypsum board prices would be raised or stabilized and he denied that he even discussed with Avery the matter of the fixing of prices on patented gypsum board (R. 1464-1465).

Nelson similarly testified that he never heard of any agreement or understanding as to what USG would do about gypsum board prices after Certain-teed took a license (R. 1491).

Whittemore strenuously denied that the license agreement was made for the purpose of getting gypsum board prices fixed (R. 1404) and testified that USG never agreed to do anything with respect to establishing prices on patented gypsum board nor, in fact, would USG even discuss the subject (R. 1402-1403).

As we have said, Lenci made it clear that no licensee knew what USG would or would not do with respect to prices subsequent to the execution of the licenses (R. 2792). He repeatedly stated that there was no understanding or agreement that prices would be raised and stabilized and, indeed, he had never heard the subject mentioned (R. 2808, 2876, 2972, 2992, 3032, 3087-3088).

The Government's argument that the May, 1929, licenses were signed in bad faith and with the motive of eliminating competition because the Utzman closed-edge patent had only eleven weeks to run is without merit (Gov. brief, pp. 172, 226). On the contrary, the shortness of that time interval to which price control was confined, proves beyond any doubt that price control was not a significant factor. Indeed it appears that George M. Brown of Certain-teed, who was violently opposed to price control (R. 1222, 1401), took the license because price control terminated a short time later (R. 1401). Moreover, the Government disregards the fact that the May licenses covered many other patents essential to the manufacture of gypsum board and did not expire until February, 1937. As Whittemore said (R. 1399):

> "The Utzman patent was only one of some fifty to one hundred patents that we were licensed to use.

Some of those patents were vital in the production of closed-edge board, and had we not had a blanket license to use all of the patents of USG, we would have been subject to possible litigation, and we wanted to avoid that—we had had plenty."

The November, 1929 Licenses[52]

We have already recited in detail the Trial Court's findings with respect to USG's offer of a foam board license to its licensees, the advantages of the new product, the claims of infringement of the Haggerty starch patent made by Universal, the acquisition of the Haggerty patent by USG, the offer of new licenses covering the outstanding patents of the prior licenses, the Haggerty patent and the applications for patents on the foam board invention, the signing of new licenses at various times during October, 1929, by all licensees except Texas, the settlement of the litigation with American and the granting of a license, and the signing of a license by Kelley (supra, pp. 13-17).

The foregoing facts were found by the Trial Court on ample evidence and the Government has not assigned any error with respect to them (R. 4178-4186). They are disregarded by the Government in its discussion of alleged facts which is largely based on governmental inferences drawn from certain memoranda of C. O. Brown of Certain-teed (Gov. brief, pp. 75-78, 80-85). The C. O. Brown memoranda were exhibits 227 and 231 (R. 5392, 1057-1058, 1060, 5400, 1075-1076) and, as we have noted, the Trial Court made an express finding that they did not establish bad faith in the execution of the license agreements on the part of Certain-teed or any other person or company (FF. 39, R. 4150). That this finding is justified is clear.

The Government first suggests that the memoranda in question establish an agreement or understanding that another patent would be found to support price control after the expiration of the Utzman patent. All witnesses testified that there was not such agreement or understanding (R: Griswold, 701; Blagden, 875; Holland, 966; C. O. Brown, 1231; Whittemore, 1400-1401, 1408-1409, 1415; G. M. Brown, 1465; Lenci, 2810, 2973-2974). The Government also contends that an inference should be drawn from these memoranda that Certain-teed and the other licensees were not interested in the starch or bubble patents except as a vehicle for price control. But such an inference cannot be drawn in the face of overwhelming testimony directly to the contrary. The primary reason of Certain-teed in taking a license under the Haggerty starch and Roos bubble board patents was that the method of manufacture was cheaper, products could be made much lighter with resultant saving in transportation costs and a better product resulted (FF. 39; R. 4150, 1407). It had already investigated the starch situation and thought that it might be subject, on account of its own use of starch, to a claim of infringement of the Haggerty patent (R. 1407-1408, 1413). When the opportunity to obtain a license under the starch patents as well as the bubble board was presented Certain-teed was glad to take advantage of it. It was not motivated by a desire for price-fixing (R. 1405, 1413, 1428). There was no understanding or agreement that the starch and bubble patents or the proposed licenses would be used as a vehicle to obtain price control (R. 1415). Certain-teed made a careful investigation of the merits of the bubble board invention before deciding to take the November license (R. 1407-1408). It had experimented with other materials in an effort to find something like bubble board and something to replace sawdust as an aggregate. It had attempted to create voids in the core with an effervescent material but that proved to be inefficient and uncontrollable (R. 1409-1411). After thorough consideration and experimentation by its research department, Certain-teed proceeded to take the bubble license because it wanted to use the bubble board invention (R. 1411-1412). After taking the license, Certain-teed used the inventions covered by the patents (R. 1421-1422).

Lenci testified that Ebsary had been advised to decide whether it wanted to avail itself of the bubble board invention (R. 2819-2820, 2876-2877). Ebsary investigated the matter of the new development and decided, as a completely independent matter, that it wanted to use the patents and take a license (R. 2811-2812, 3004, 3082-3083). In fact, Ebsary was so anxious to get into production under the new invention that it wanted the right to make bubble board prior to the date when the license became effective (R. 2832). The fact that Ebsary paid approximately $200,000 in royalties[53] for the starch-bubble license negatives any charge that the license was taken in bad faith (R. 3079). Lenci testified that at all times the Ebsary company used the patents of USG after taking the license making closed-edge board (R. 2479), board with foam (R. 2832), and with starch (R. 2832).

[53]It is conceded that all licensees paid the full royalties called for by the license contracts. The amount paid by Ebsary was but a small fraction of the total royalties paid (see R. 162).

The representatives of other licensees who testified upon the trial uniformly established that the companies desired to use USG's patents and did use them after taking the licenses. Holland of Universal (R. 958); Neale of Atlantic (R. 1296, 1311); Black of American (R. 1368); Miller of Celotex (R. 1382-1384); Chism of Texas (R. 3481-3483); Tomkins of Newark (R. 2030, Ex. 362, R. 6029, 1876).

All of this testimony, direct, positive and unequivocal compelled the conclusion of the Trial Court that the licensees took the licenses in entire good faith because they wanted and needed USG's patents in order to remain in the business of manufacturing gypsum board.

The Government improperly criticizes the Trial Court's finding with respect to the case of Universal Gypsum & Lime Co. v. Haggerty, 21 Fed. (2d) 544 (W. D. N. Y. 1927). (Gov. brief, p. 81). As appears from the opinion in that case, Universal sued National and Haggerty claiming infringement of the Haggerty starch patent. The Court granted a motion for a preliminary injunction. The Court construed the patent broadly and held that it was infringed, that defendants were not in a position to challenge its validity, and required National to post a substantial bond or suffer the enforcement of the temporary injunction. Accordingly we submit that the Trial Court's finding on this subject is correct.

At this stage of its discussion of alleged facts, the Government is guilty of another false statement. On page 86 of its brief it is stated that "USG reserved the right to determine and fix the prices at which the licensees sold board (1) 'manufactured by licensee by use of any of the machines or appliances covered by any letters patent * * *' ". By this the Government unquestionably means that it was agreed under the licenses that USG might fix prices under machine or process patents. The error in the Government's statement lies in the fact that the language which is omitted and merely indicated by asterisks qualifies the preceding language so as to limit the price control to product patents. The omitted language is "and which shall embody the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in any of said patents which are presently issued" (R. 72, 4294, 4318, 4339, 4358, 4382, 4426, 4449, 4477). Thus price-fixing was limited to gypsum board embodying the inventions of patents already issued which means, of course, product patents, for only the inventions of a product patent will be embodied in the resultant article. It would appear that the erroneous quotation is a deliberate attempt to mislead the Court in view of the Government's strenuous contention that the General Electric doctrine is limited to product patents.

Metallized Board

In or about 1934 gypsum board became confronted with competition from fibre insulation boards which had been developed and put on the market. For the purpose of meeting this competition USG developed metallized board. Henning of USG was anxious for the entire industry to get behind the manufacture of metallized board and he realized that the only way to accomplish this was to have all manufacturers produce the product (R. 1303, Exs. 287, 288, 290, R. 5841-5842, 5844, 1261, 1263, 1266).

USG offered to each of its licensees a license to manufacture and sell metallized board under USG's patent rights. Each of the licensees, except Texas, signed such license agreements at varying times in 1934 and 1935 (Exs. 17-22, 24, R. 4499-4559, 4573, 457).

The only contention raised by the Government in respect of the metallized board licenses is that set forth in Par. 114 of the complaint (R. 30) that at the time of the execution of said licenses, none of the licensees, except National, intended to manufacture metallized board but that all of said licensees, except National, intended to purchase metallized board from USG or National for resale to retail dealers and consumers at the prices and upon the terms and conditions of sale established by USG. In effect the charge was one of resale price-fixing. The Trial Court found specifically and in detail that the Government failed to establish that the metallized board licenses were signed by the various licensees without any expectation that they would manufacture such board, but with the intention that they would purchase it from USG or National and then resell it at the prices and under conditions fixed by USG. On the contrary, it was found that said licenses were made in good faith by each of the licensees with the intention to manufacture such board and that the prices fixed by USG under the metallized board licenses applied only to the patented metallized board manufactured and sold by the respective licensees and that there was no resale price-fixing in respect of such board (FF. 46-53, R. 4152-4154).

The Government assigned no error as to any of these findings except that portion of finding No. 53 that there was no resale price fixing in respect of such board. (R. 4182-4183, Gov. brief, p. 160). The evidence not only supports but compels the findings of the Trial Court. Certainteed (R. 1238, 1240, 1402, 1428; Atlantic, R. 1268-1270, 1296-1297, 1303-1308; American, R. 1363-1364, 1368; Kelley and Newark, R. 1897-1898, 1961; Ebsary, R. 2761, 2939-2941, 3059-3060).

The Government's discussion of alleged facts on this topic contains the suggestion that the metallized board licenses were the result of concerted action. The Trial Court's findings and the record references shown above dispose of this contention.

On page 93 of the Government's brief it is stated that economic pressure was put upon certain manufacturers to become licensees. But it is apparent that the only "pressure' was the manufacturers' own desires to market the patented product (FF. 46-53, R. 4152-4154). Moreover, as the Trial Court properly found, there is no issue in this case that the licenses were obtained by coercion (FF. 29, R. 4148).

Perforated Lath

The Trial Court found that in many localities there are building code requirements in the case of plaster bases that a wall structure (the base plus the applied coat of plaster) must stand a one-hour fire test. To meet this requirement, USG developed the perforated gypsum lath covered by the Roos patent, which contained perforations of such size and spacing as to permit a wall structure composed of it to withstand the one hour test. When plaster is applied to this type of lath some of it passes through the perforations and forms a mechanical key which, because of the size and spacing of the holes, supports the coat of plaster with the result that it will resist fire for an hour. USG's perforated lath passed the one hour fire test of the United States Bureau of Standards and received the Bureau's one hour fire rating. This was the first gypsum lath ever to pass this test. The only perforated lath which ever passed the Bureau's one hour test was of the type covered by the Roos perforated lath patent (FF. 42, R. 4151-4152). No error is assigned as to these findings, (Gov. brief, p. 160).

USG granted patent licenses to Certain-teed on June 8, 1936, American on July 10, 1936, Ebsary on February 2, 1937, and Kelley on June 23, 1937, for the manufacture, use and sale of perforated lath. Until May, 1938, USG established minimum prices on perforated lath made and sold by the licensees and charged a small royalty therefor. Then USG offered a revised perforated lath license to its licensees royalty free and such revised licenses were accepted by Certain-teed, Ebsary and Kelley. On January 3, 1939, USG granted Newark a royalty free perforated lath license after that company had merged with Kelley (Ex. 39, R. 5247, 462; FF. 17, R. 4142-4143). Of these facts the Government's assignment of errors challenges only that a royalty free license was offered (R. 4178-4186), but the evidence fully supports that finding.

The only charge with respect to perforated lath is that at the time of the execution, and throughout the period of the operation, of the perforated lath license agreements, USG, Certain-teed, and American were informed and believed that the perforated lath patent was void and that the license agreements were therefore not bona fide (Complaint, par. 19, R. 31).

The Trial Court found, on ample evidence, that the evidence established that Certain-teed and Newark were acting in good faith in respect of the perforated lath license (FF. 43, 44, R. 4152). It was also found that the Government failed to introduce any evidence questioning the good faith of American or Ebsary in respect of taking perforated lath licenses (FF. 45, R. 4152).

In discussing perforated lath, the Government gives the misleading and erroneous impression that the Roos patent is invalid because lath with perforations was old (Gov. brief, p. 94). Whether or not lath with perforation was old is beside the point since the Roos invention covers a lath with perforations of such size and spacing as to permit the board to pass a one hour fire test. The invention lies in the size and spacing of the holes rather than the fact of perforation. The evidence establishes that in tests performed at the United States Bureau of Standards many laths with holes, gouges, indentations or other similar devices designed to give greater bond between the lath and applied coat of plaster failed to pass the one hour fire test. The only perforated lath which ever passed the test was the type covered by the Roos perforated lath patent (R. 3616, FF. 42, R. 4151-4152).

The Government's charges of bad faith (Brief, p. 98) are based on evidence that before taking a license Certain-teed received two letters from a patent attorney to the effect that in the patent attorney's view the Roos perforated lath patent was invalid (Exs. 601, 602, R. 6303-6307, 3454). This attorney, Spencer, admitted however that in advising Certain-teed on this subject he pointed out, as the letters show, that his opinion might be wrong, that the patent was valid on its face, and that litigation which might ensue could be expensive and the damages high (R. 3455-3456). He further recognized the possibility that a district court could well hold the patent valid and that such a decision could be affirmed by a Circuit Court of Appeals (R. 6308). Finally, he recommended that Certain-teed should not ignore the patent but should attempt to make a perforated lath which would avoid the claims of the patent (R. 6305-6306). Whittemore of Certain-teed testified that since USG was proposing to bring out a perforated lath, Certain-teed would have to obtain a supply of the product in order to be competitive. If Certain-teed tried to make its own product, it would have the expense of testing and obtaining a one hour rating and it might get into litigation. Whittemore's experience with opinions of patent attorneys caused him not to rely too confidently on their judgment. Certain-teed therefore, determined to take the perforated lath license as a matter of sound business judgment (R. 1416-1418).

Tomkins of Newark testified that his company took a perforated lath license from USG because it felt that it had to be in a position to market the product. The sale of the product had been increasing rapidly and Newark wanted to be able to manufacture and sell it lawfully and without infringing the patent rights of USG (R. 2054-2055).

It is therefore apparent that the findings of the Trial Court that the perforated lath licenses were entered into in good faith are well supported by the evidence.

Operations under the Licenses

The Trial Court found that the Government failed to establish that the license agreements were executed with intent to accomplish restraints of trade beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly (FF. 57, R. 4155). It also found that the actual operations of the defendants under the license agreements were not carried beyond the proper limits of the patent monopoly and licensing thereunder (FF. 86, R. 4160). In addition to these general findings, the Trial Court specifically found that the evidence failed to sustain the Government's charges that defendants (1) illegally raised and fixed at arbitrary and non-competitive levels the price of gypsum; (2) accomplished improper standardization of gypsum board and its method of production; (3) raised, maintained and stabilized the level of prices of unpatented material—plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products; (4) effectuated improper restriction upon distribution of gypsum board, plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products; or (5) fixed the prices at which manufacturing distributors resold gypsum board (FF. 86, R. 4160-4161). It will appear in the following discussion that these findings are correct.

Establishment of Prices on Patented Board

The Trial Court found that the defendants did not by any of their operations under the license agreements, nor by any agreement or understanding, illegally raise or fix at arbitrary or non-competitive levels the price of gypsum board. Of course, as is recognized by the Trial Court, the right to establish minimum prices under the General Electric doctrine involves in a sense the establishment of a "non-competitive" price for the patented article. However this is what the law allows (R. 4051-4055, 4073-4074).

Since the Government urged in the Court below, as here, that USG established unreasonably high prices, the Trial Court found that the evidence did not support the charge. After the signing of the May, 1929, licenses, the USG bulletins established patented board prices at the levels at which USG had been selling board just prior to the execution of these licenses, and subsequently these bulletin prices were advanced over what they had been during the price war. But the prices so established did not exceed those which prevailed prior to the first license (the Beaver license) and the price war. Since 1935 the prices have been lowered so that for the past several years wallboard has sold for $23 per thousand square feet and lath for $13, as compared with $30 and $15-$16, respectively, before the first license (FF. 87, 88, R. 4161).

The Government's contentions about gypsum board prices appearing on pages 248-250 of its brief are deceptive and unsound. It is stated that during the period from 1927 to 1929 the price of closed-edge board dropped from $30 to $20 allegedly because there was competition from open-edge board and that closed-edge board could only command a premium of $2 over open-edge board. The Government then makes the comparison that after 1929 board prices went up to a high of $28.50 in 1934. The Government fails to recognize that the conditions in 1927-1929 were not normal, that because of the dissension and bitterness engendered by years of patent infringement litigation a demoralizing price war pervaded the industry with the result that many companies were selling gypsum products below cost (FF. 60, R. 4155, 973). These conditions caused the drop in the price of closed-edge board from $30 to $20, not the fact that open-edge board was being marketed. Thus the very exhibits relied upon by the Government show that the prices of all gypsum products were very low during this period (Exs. 619, 620, 6403-6414). For example, plaster was selling for as low as $2 per ton (R. 6410). Furthermore, the Government itself pleaded in its complaint that "the litigation of the last nine years had already created bitterness in the industry which reflected itself in increasing price competition in an industry which until 1925 had been unusually stable and profitable" (Par. 56, R. 13). Prior to 1925, when the Government does not even charge that a conspiracy existed, open-edge board was in competition with closed-edge board yet the latter admittedly had a stable price of $30. Yet after the alleged conspiracy is said to have gone into effect the highest price was $28.50 in 1934 which prevailed for but a short period. Since 1935 the price of wallboard has been only $23 (FF. 88, R. 4161). These considerations show how unsound the argument is that open-edge board was the fundamental factor in determining the level of prices.

The remark that the closed-edge patent was of little value because that type board could command but a $2 premium is false (Gov. brief, p. 248). Actually the premium was higher (R. 2964, 6411). Moreover, the premium in price does not tell the whole story since closed-edge board is cheaper to make (R. 874, 1236, 1243, 2790, 2944-2965, 3479). In any event, a $2 premium on a $20 product is of tremendous value to the practical business man. Obviously a discovery which permits a manufacturer to get $2 more for his product than anyone else can get for theirs is of great value.

Open-edge Board

The Government charged that USG and its licensees were guilty of unlawful practices of standardization in concertedly eliminating open-edge board, seconds and No. 2 board and by restrictions on the packaging of board.

As to open-edge board, the Trial Court found that there was no understanding or agreement by defendants to refrain from or discontinue the manufacture and sale of open-edge board and that the license agreements were not executed with an intent to eliminate that type of board (FF. 62-66, 90, R. 4155-4156, 4161).

The evidence conclusively establishes the correctness of these findings. Closed-edge board not only was a superior product but was cheaper to make and the trade demanded it (R. 687, 874-875, 1236, 1243, 1385, 1398-1399, 1404, 1446-1447, 1455-1456, 2790, 2964-2965, 3479-3481). The Government itself alleged in the complaint that closed-edge board represented a substantial improvement of that then on the market and that the consumer demand for it stimulated other manufacturers to produce and market board with a protected edge (Par. 49, R. 11). All companies in the industry recognized that they needed the superior product to stay in business. Many of them went so far as to market boards with closed edges or modified closed edges which infringed USG's patents. It is not disputed that an aggregate of over $700,000 was paid to USG by these infringing companies in part payment of damages for infringement. Naturally when any company became a licensee it no longer desired to manufacture the open-edge type of board. This is an additional indication of the importance of the patents rather than evidence of an unlawful combination. The witnesses uniformly testified that there was no agreement or understanding, either within or without the license agreements, that the manufacture of open-edge board would be discontinued (Whittemore, R. 1403-1404; Nelson, R. 1494; Lenci, R. 2790, 2791-2792, 2800, 3080-3082).

The Government complains of the Trial Court's finding that only Texas, Certain-teed and Ebsary had made open-edge board before signing their licenses (FF. 62, R. 4155) although no error was assigned in respect of the finding (Gov. brief, p. 160). It is contended that this finding is contrary to the admitted facts of the case since there is an allegation in the complaint that after July 11, 1928, American and Niagara marketed open-edge board and this is admitted in the answers of some of the defendants (Gov. brief, pp. 65, 105). We submit that the Trial Court's finding is justified. For years American made closed-edge board with the so-called Clark edge and Niagara followed suit as an informal licensee of American (R. 480, 546-547). On July 11, 1928, judgment was entered holding American an infringer and it was to be assumed that they went to an open-edge. Upon the trial, however, it was established by the Government's witness that after July, 1928, American made a board with the edge enclosed with tape (R. 669).

The Government criticizes the Trial Court's finding that "when the closed-edge board of the Utzman patent came into the market the open-edge board was largely displaced by the demand of the trade for the better product" (Gov. brief, p. 105). As we have noted, the Government's own complaint alleges that closed-edge board was "a substantial improvement" and that there was consumer demand for that type of product (see Complaint, pars. 49, 68, R. 11, 16). Moreover, a mass of testimony establishes that the trade demanded the closed-edge board and that open-edge board could not be sold (R. 478, 480, 546, 570-571, 573, 575-576, 670, 687, 690, 695, 712, 874-875, 1236, 1243, 1385, 1398-1399, 1446-1447, 1455-1456, 2790, 2964-2965, 3479-3481).

The Government's discussion of alleged facts on the matter of open-edge board is based for the most part on general statements in letters or testimony that the industry would be better off if there was uniformity of product. That is a statement which could doubtless be applied to any industry but it would hardly prove that the speaker was in a conspiracy to bring about standardization.

The Government again relies on Exhibits 324 and 212, the answer of Certain-teed and the memorandum of George

M. Brown charging USG with aspiring to unlawful domination (Gov. brief, p. 111). We have discussed these exhibits above and the Court's specific finding that they do not establish any bad faith in the execution of the license agreement (supra, pp. 112-114).

Finally, the Government relies on the fifth "whereas" clause of the May licenses to the effect that the licensor has been unwilling to grant a license except on condition that the licensee will manufacture only a closed-edge board to establish that the parties conspired to eliminate open-edge board. The Government glosses over the sixth "whereas" clause which waives the requirement of the fifth (R. 50). The Trial Court specifically held that the sixth "whereas" clause was not a purported waiver of the condition referred to in the fifth and that there was no understanding or agreement that open-edge board was to be discontinued (FF. 65, R. 4156). This finding is fully supported by the evidence (R. 380-382, 880, 1403-1404, 1495, 2790-2792, 2800, 2807).

Seconds and No. 2 Board

The Trial Court found that a "second" is a defective board produced unintentionally in the manufacture of standard board while a No. 2 board is a board made of lower grade material than that used in the manufacturing of the standard board. Both seconds and No. 2 board are by definition board made under the patents. There was no agreement or understanding that seconds or No. 2 board would not be manufactured. On the contrary, the parties to the license agreements were free at all times to make and sell such board (FF. 67, R. 4156-4157).

The Government attacks the finding of the Trial Court that the evidence failed to establish that there was an elimination of seconds and No. 2 board. The Court noted that it is admitted that all companies make some seconds in the course of manufacture. The Government contends that its charge did not mean elimination in that sense but meant that seconds have been eliminated from sale on the market (Gov. brief, pp. 107-108). It thus appears that the Government's real complaint is that USG established one price for all patented board or, conversely, failed to establish a lower price for seconds and No. 2 board. The Trial Court rightly held that even if seconds and No. 2 board went wholly off the market as the result of the bulletins, there would be no illegality (R. 4077-4078). Nevertheless there was no evidence of any elimination of seconds and No. 2 board and the witnesses established that there was no agreement or understanding on the subject (R. 1236, 1297, 1365, 3047-3048).

Bundling

Among the patents owned by USG were those covering a method of binding gypsum board together with gummed tape running lengthwise along the edges of the board. There was no satisfactory method of bundling gypsum board or lath except by means of the patented bundle. Attempts to tie the board with wire resulted in the wire slipping and cutting the board thereby causing much breakage. Delivery of board by the licensees in broken condition would tend to devalue the product and thus lessen the pecuniary reward of the patentee's monopoly (FF. 70, R. 4157). No error was assigned as to this finding (Gov. brief, p. 160).

The four licenses which were executed in May, 1929, granted rights under a bundling patent and required the licensees to use this bundling method and no other.[54] However, the restrictive provision was abandoned when the November, 1929, licenses were executed, and no such provision has been incorporated in those or any later licenses. The Trial Court inferred that the restrictive provision of the May, 1929, licenses was to exploit the bundling patent and to accomplish packaging of board by the licensees in a manner which would preserve quality, i.e., without breakage (FF. 70, R. 4157). The Trial Court found that any question as to the propriety of the restrictive provision has become moot (R. 4078-4079, FF. 93, R. 4162). The Trial Court further found that the royalty provision relating to the bundling patents did not establish an attempt to standardize by eliminating other methods of packaging, and that the provisions were not so intended and did not have such effect, and that no other method (except an uneconomic one) was available (FF. 71, R. 4157).

The Government does not challenge the holding of the Trial Court in respect of the restrictive provision of the May, 1929 licenses (see Par. 48, R. 4184). Its only contention is that illegal standardization came about because, under the November licenses, royalties were charged on all bundled board whether or not under the patents (Gov. brief, p. 115). The royalty was charged for the privilege of using the patents and was measured by the quantity bundled by any method. The Trial Court properly held that this provision did not establish an attempt to eliminate other methods of bundling (FF. 71, R. 4157-4158). It found on ample evidence that there was no satisfactory way of bundling gypsum board or lath except by means of the patented bundle (FF. 70, R. 4157, 1068, 1071-1073, 1225, 1456). Attempts to tie the board with wire resulted in the wire slipping and cutting the board thereby causing much breakage (FF. 70, R. 4157, 3489-3491). There was no evidence, and the Government points to none, that any existing method of packaging was driven off the market. Thus there was no reason for the Trial Court to adopt the Government view that the royalty clause brought about unlawful standardization. Its present argument to that effect (Gov. brief, p. 115) is nothing more than a request that this Court reject the findings and inferences of the Trial Court and adopt the inferences requested by the Government although the latter are unsupported by any evidence. The argument is manifestly without merit (see discussion on inferences, R. 4013-4015).

Bulletin Provisions

In the exercise of its right to establish minimum prices under the licenses, USG issued licensee bulletins establishing the minimum prices at which the respective licensees should sell the patented gypsum board manufactured by them under the licenses. The price bulletins in the instant case contained two classes of provisions, one class providing how price should be arrived at, the other intended to protect the price fixed, i.e., to prevent indirect price cutting in the sale of the patented product. The price provisions were drafted in view of the fact that the ultimate price at which the patented product was to be sold cannot be arrived at merely by naming an amount, but other factors which have economic relationship to price—such as terms of payment, cost of delivery to various areas, including freight charges, quantity sold, type of product sold, and the like must also be stipulated (FF. 26, R. 4147).

The Trial Court found that the minimum price bulletins were limited in their application to patented board manufactured and sold by each licensee under its license (FF. 18, R. 4143). The Government assigned no error with respect to this finding (See par. 26, R. 4181).

We believe that it would serve no useful purpose to review at length the various provisions of the bulletins. These were considered in detail by the Trial Court (R. 3945-3947, fn. 13) and are compared with the provisions in the license in the General Electric case (R. 3987-3990, fn. 25). The Trial Court found that there was no material distinction between the terms and conditions of the license agreements and price bulletins in the instant case, as compared with the terms and conditions, including price provisions, in the General Electric case (FF. 27, R. 4147).

The Government's discussion of alleged facts dwells on a number of detailed terms and conditions of sale mentioned in the price bulletins with the apparent objective of conveying the erroneous impression that there was tremendous "regimentation" in the gypsum industry (Gov. brief, pp. 114-122, 172, 243, 248-252, 255). To begin with it is to be noted that the price bulletins admittedly applied only to patented gypsum board and not to the many other gypsum products. All that the bulletins did was to establish minimum prices for patented gypsum board sold upon certain terms (R. 2503, 2509, 2510-2514, 2518-2523, 2559, 2562-2563, 2605-2613, 2812, 2837, 2857-2864, 2903-2905, 2907-2908, 2910, 2913, 2914-2916, 2922-2924, 2929-2932, 2941-2942). It would have been meaningless for the bulletins merely to have named an amount of money as the minimum price (Exs. 33-39; R. 4619-5247, 462). Numerous other factors relating thereto such as method of delivery, quantity, terms of payment, etc. have to be known since all of these matters affect the value of and the price of the patented article (R. 2834-2843). The terms and conditions of sale of the bulletins were not arbitrary delimitations but were the normal and economic terms which grow up in any business (R. 2815-2816). Many of them had been in existence for years (R. 970-971, 2481, 2815, 2816, 2869-2876, 2908-2909, 3072-3073, 3074-3078; 3083-3087). The same applies to the method of pricing (R. 2908-2909).

The Government questions the Trial Court's finding that the price of board was calculated on the basis of a mill base price plus freight from the nearest mill (freight-wise) to the point of destination (Gov. brief, pp. 116, 117). This is precisely what its own witness testified to (R. 2909) and is the fact as shown by the bulletins. The Government's effort to establish that the bulletins provide for a basing point system rather than a freight equalization system is erroneous and irrelevant. There has never been any charge in this case that the method of pricing is unlawful and the observation on page 251 of the Government's brief that basing points would probably constitute a price discrimination in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act is manifestly unjustified.

Jobbers

A jobber is a functionary in the wholesaling process who buys from the manufacturer, or from another wholesaler who has bought from the manufacturer, and sells to the dealer. The jobber's service is that of relieving the manufacturer, or, in some instances, the wholesaler, from the necessity of direct contact with the dealer—this being accomplished by the jobber's sales force. In the gypsum industry, jobbers occupy a somewhat ambiguous position since it is difficult to know whether or not a given person is a jobber (FF. 76, R. 4158-4159).

After the May licenses were signed, the license bulletins established a 10% discount off the price of patented gypsum board on sales to jobbers (Ex. 408, R. 6097, 2505). On August 8, 1930, USG established the minimum price at which a licensee might sell its patented board to jobbers at the same level as the minimum price to the regular dealer trade. Thereafter a jobber who purchased patented board from either USG or one of its licensees was obliged to pay the same price as a dealer. The discontinuance of the discount did not have the effect of forbidding sales of board to jobbers if they were willing to buy at the dealer price. Many jobbers continued to buy board and were able to perform a proper jobbers' function (FF. 100, R. 4164).

In addition to the foregoing, the Trial Court found that the license agreements were not executed with an intent to effectuate improper restrictions upon the distribution of gypsum board, plaster or miscellaneous gypsum products, specifically, to "eliminate" jobbers through the discontinuance of a sales discount (FF. 75, R. 4158). The Court also found that the discontinuance of the jobber discount on patented gypsum board was not accomplished pursuant to any understanding or agreement among defendants or any of them (FF. 101, R. 4164), and that the Government failed to introduce any evidence concerning any dealings by USG or its licensees with jobbers in respect of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products (FF. 80, R. 4159).

All of the foregoing findings are fully justified by the evidence. As to patented gypsum board, numerous witnesses testified that there was no agreement or understanding whereby jobbers would be eliminated from the distribution system of gypsum board; nor was there any understanding or agreement that the jobber discount would be discontinued or the price to jobbers made the same as the dealer price (Lenci, R. 2809-2810, 2876, 2995-2996, 3038-3040; 3077-3078; George M. Brown, R. 1465; Black, R. 1358-1360). There was nothing in the license agreement or bulletins which prohibited sales of gypsum board to jobbers (R. 2809, 2876). As to the charge that jobbers were eliminated in respect of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products, the Government's brief does not challenge the Trial Court's finding (See Gov. brief, p. 122).

The Government asserts that the only possible pretext for eliminating "jobbers" is that appellees could not lawfully control the resale price (Gov. brief, p. 252). No attempt is made to support this statement and there is no evidence in the entire record to justify it. If any reason were necessary to justify USG's establishment of a uniform price for patented gypsum board for both dealers and jobbers it lies in the fact that a jobber serves no economic purpose to a manufacturer who maintains an adequate sales department.

The Government's underlying contention in respect of jobbers is not that jobbers were kept from buying and selling patented gypsum board but that USG in exercising its right of price control failed to maintain a lower price for jobbers than for other classes of trade. The Government's real quarrel is with the doctrine of the General Electric case rather than the findings of the Trial Court.

Manufacturing Distributors

The term "manufacturing distributor" is applicable to companies which manufacture and sell gypsum plaster but which do not, for lack of investment in the large amount of plant equipment necessary in the making of gypsum board, manufacture board. In order to be able to market a full line of products, the manufacturing distributors purchase gypsum board from USG or one or more of its licensees. The purchases are made at a discount, and the sales of the board are made to the same dealer trade as that to which USG and its licensees sell their board, and are therefore made in competition with USG and its licensees. The license agreements provided that a licensee might not sell patented gypsum board to manufacturing distributors without the written consent of USG (FF. 82, R. 4159, 4160).

USG freely, and without conditions attached, granted consents to the licensees to sell manufacturing distributors. No consent once granted was ever withdrawn. The Trial Court found that the consents were never used in any way to control or attempt to control the resale price of any of the manufacturing distributors (FF. 106, R. 4165).

The manufacturing distributors referred to in the evidence are Structural Gypsum Corporation, of Linden, New Jersey; the Connecticut Adamant Plaster Company, of New Haven, Connecticut; and the Oakfield Gypsum Products Corporation, of Oakfield, New York.

The Trial Court found that there was no understanding or agreement of any kind that the resale prices of manufacturing distributors should be regulated or controlled[55] (FF. 83-84, 104-117, R. 4160, 4165 4167).

The foregoing findings are amply justified by the evidence. Numerous witnesses testified directly and unequivocally that there was no agreement or understanding of any kind that the resale prices of manufacturing distributors on gypsum board would be regulated or controlled (Neale, R. 1298-1299; Whittemore, R. 1402; Tomkins, R. 1987; Lenci, R. 2665, 2888-2891, 2943-2944, 2947-2948, 3033, 3071; Stromquist, R. 3602). The manufacturing distributors themselves likewise testified that they had no agreements or understandings as to the resale prices they should charge on gypsum board (Hansen, R. 3146-3147; 3215-3216; McCormack, R. 3382; Kellogg, R. 3410).

As to the consent to sell clauses of the licenses, the testimony is uniformly to the effect that USG granted to licensees consents to sell manufacturing distributors at a discount freely and without any conditions attached (Tomkins, R. 2035; Lenci, R. 2944; see also Hansen, R. 3217; McCormack, R. 3386; Kellogg, R. 3411).

The Government stresses here, as it did in the Trial Court, a number of exhibits having to do with charges of license violations of the minimum prices of patented board

[55]This is the second time that a Court has held that the Government's charges in respect of jobbers and manufacturing distributors are without substance. In a prior criminal proceeding in which it was charged that USG, National, Certain-teed, Ebsary, and Newark, and numerous officers and employees of these companies and of American conspired illegally to control the prices of manufacturing distributors and to eliminate jobbers from the gypsum board industry, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia directed a verdict in favor of defendants at the conclusion of the Government's case (R. 4144).

in which reference is made to manufacturing distributors (Gov. brief, pp. 128-132). It has been the Government's contention that these are complaints against and regulations of manufacturing distributors. However, the Trial Court made specific and detailed findings that such evidence involved instances of violations of minimum prices by licensees, and not manufacturing distributors (FF. 112-117, R. 4166-4167). These findings are amply justified. For the most part, they are established by the very exhibits which the Government relies on. (Structural, Ex. 438, R. 6139, 2573; Lenci, R. 2846-2849, 2569; Ex. 443, R. 6144, 2573; Ex. 444, R. 6147, 2573; Ex. 436, R. 6136, 2573; Ex. 437, R. 6138, 2573; Ex. 438, R. 6139, 2573; Ex. 447, R. 6149, 2591; Ex. 439, R. 6141, 2573; Ex. 440, R. 6142, 2573; Ex. 449, R. 6151, 2591; Ex. 441, R. 6143, 2573; Ex. 442, R. 6145, 2573; Ex. 445, R. 6148, 2573; Ex. 446, R. 6148, 2573; Ex. 450, R. 6152, 2591; Lenci, R. 2585-2586, 3033-3034, 2568-2573; Oakfield, Ex. 512, R. 6206, 2744; Ex. 513A, R. 6208, 2744; Ex. 514, R. 6209, 2744; Lenci, R. 2718-2720, 2743-2744, 2926-2927; Hansen, R. 3093-3104; Connecticut Adamant, Ex. 463, R. 6165, 2591; Ex. 467, R. 6169, 2591; Lenci, R. 2892-2893; Ex. 464, R. 6166, 2591; Ex. 468, R. 6169, 2591; Lenci, R. 2891-2892, 2597-2598).

Board Survey and Licensee Meetings

In 1932 USG set up as a department a wholly owned corporation called the Board Survey Company. Its function was to receive complaints of license violations, to investigate the facts, call them to the attention of the licensee involved, and upon occasion to the attention of the licensor USG. Board Survey Company was organized by USG for the purpose of bringing about compliance with the licenses. The licensees had no part in its formation, management or operation. From time to time a representative of USG, as licensor, met with representatives of the licensee companies for the purpose of explaining to them the provisions of the minimum price bulletins and for the purpose of securing adherence to such minimum prices by the licensees (FF. 20, R. 4143-4144).

The Government assigned no error in respect of the foregoing findings (See R. 4178-4186), but devotes 15 pages of its brief discussing numerous minor details in connection with price bulletins which were raised from time to time by licensor and licensees (Gov. brief, pp. 135-149).

Although the Government concedes that there was a relation between the price of board and the bulletin provisions (Gov. brief, p. 255), it nevertheless complains that licensee meetings were the occasions for concerted agreement on all those practices. The evidence is clear that there was no concerted action at licensee meetings (R. 2943). The Trial Court's findings that such meetings (the last of which was held ten years ago) were held simply to clarify the license bulletins is fully supported by evidence (R. 2814-2815; 3005-3006). Among the things complained of as having been discussed at the licensee meetings are questions with respect to commission salesmen, the use of dunnage, allowance of trade discounts and payments, warehousing and consignment sales, jobber sales, truck deliveries to the job, and advertising allowances, all which were covered from time to time by provisions in the various license bulletins.

With respect to commission salesmen, there was a practice in the industry to cut the price of the patented board by paying commissions to a salesman who would in turn split his commission with the customer, the effect of which was to reduce the price of the board (R. 2853-2854). That was all that was discussed at the meeting of October 17, 1932, and the license bulletin which followed was intended to prevent that practice and was so understood by the licensees (R. 2857). This, together with other price concessions, was covered by a later bulletin dated February 6, 1939, to the effect that any sale of patent products, though ostensibly made at the minimum price, would be considered a violation if licensee reduces the price below the minimum by granting rebates, including the splitting of salesmen's commissions with customers (R. 100). The splitting of commissions was a deliberate rebate from the minimum price, and whenever the subject was discussed at a meeting or dealt with in a bulletin it was clearly understood that the licensor's position was that a reduction of the minimum price by splitting commissions was a license violation.

With respect to dunnage, which was board used to properly pack a shipment in cars, the practice arose among the licensees to put in a large amount of board ostensibly as dunnage but for the sole purpose of giving to the customer additional board by way of a rebate on the minimum price (R. 2659-2660). This practice was the subject matter of license bulletins issued by the licensor, and when discussed at a meeting simply represented a complaint by the licensor that overshipment of patented products in this way constituted a violation of the minimum p[illegible] bulletin. Finally, the subject was covered by the bulletin of February 23, 1937, above referred to, wherein it was provided that any reduction of the minimum price, by including board in shipments under the guise of dunnage for the purpose of effecting a reduction in the minimum price, would be regarded by the licensor as a license violation (R. 100).

With respect to trade discounts, warehousing and consignment sales, jobber sales, truck deliveries to the job and advertising allowances, like the foregoing, practices grew up of using these items to cut the minimum price of board. Bulletins were issued by the licensor to curtail such practices which finally were included in the bulletin of February 6, 1939, above referred to, to the effect that a reduction in the minimum price by means of granting rebates, unwarranted refunds, credits or discounts, by hiring customers' trucks, by granting allowances for advertising or other purposes or by making any other payment or allowance in the form of money or otherwise which has for its purpose and effect reducing the price below the minimum price, was a license violation.

This is all there was to the discussions at the licensee meetings complained of by the Government. The bulletins from time to time were a development of practices which arose and were discovered by the licensor and long before this suit was commenced had been crystallized and combined into the single bulletin of February 6, 1939, attached to the bill of complaint (R. 100).

Plaster and Miscellaneous Gypsum Products

The Trial Court found that there was at no time any agreement or understanding among any of the parties to the respective license agreements that prices would be raised or fixed upon plaster or any other unpatented gypsum product. The license agreements were not executed with an intent to raise, maintain and stabilize the prices of unpatented materials. The parties to the respective license agreements knew that the licensor's right to fix minimum prices was limited to the prices on patented gypsum board manufactured and sold by the respective licensees (FF. 73, R. 4158).

The Trial Court further found that the defendants did not by any of their operations under the license agreements, nor did they by any agreement or understanding, raise, maintain or stabilize the level of prices of plaster or miscellaneous gypsum products or any other unpatented product as charged by the Government. The increase in the price of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products over the prices during the 1927-1929 price war was not the result of any device adopted or action taken by the defendants to bring about such increase (FF. 94, R. 4164).

The Trial Court also made a specific finding that a price protective provision of the bulletins that "Any sale of patented products, though ostensibly made at or above minimum price established by licensor, will nevertheless be considered a violation of the provisions of the license if licensee directly or indirectly reduces the actual price charged by licensee below such minimum price * * * by reducing the price of other products * * *" is but part of a larger provision concerning rebates and allowances made for the purpose and with the effect of reducing the licensee's price on patented board below the minimum price therefor. It was not a device to raise, maintain or stabilize the price of plaster or miscellaneous gypsum products, and it was not applied by the defendants to that end. Nor did it have that effect. On the contrary the provision in question was a proper price protective measure reasonably designed to secure to USG the pecuniary reward of its patent monopoly.

In operation, it was not used to raise, maintain or stabilize the price of unpatented materials (FF. 95, R. 4162-4163).

The Trial Court made additional findings that a number of exhibits, many of which are again relied upon by the Government in its present discussion of alleged facts, did not establish that the defendants or any of them raised, maintained or stabilized, the prices of unpatented material (FF. 96, 97, 98, R. 4163-4164).

All of these findings are fully supported by the evidence (Griswold, R. 621-623, 699-700; Blagden, R. 876; Holland, R. 996; C. O. Brown, R. 1231-1234, 1238; George M. Brown, R. 1464-1465; Nelson, R. 1492; Whittemore, R. 1401-1402; Lenci, R. 2809, 2993-2995, 3075-3077; Black, R. 1365; Tomkins, R. 2010-2011, 2023, 2033, 2061; Chism, R. 3483).

In the face of this mass of unequivocal testimony by the Government's own witnesses, the Government's contention (Gov. brief, p. 152) that the Court should draw a contrary inference from the testimony regarding Cardiff Gypsum Company, is wholly without merit, nor is the testimony of Sensibar, the only witness on the subject, open to any such inference.

Point V

THE COURT BELOW CORRECTLY HELD THAT THE GOVERNMENT MAY NOT ATTACK THE VALIDITY OF PATENTS AS ALLEGED IN PARAGRAPH 46(a) OF THE AMENDED COMPLAINT.

The license agreements in the instant case involved some 60 patents—product, process and machine—covering the manufacture of gypsum board. The complaint, as originally filed in August, 1940, charged that the alleged conspiracy had been carried out in connection with such license agreements. It was not charged that any of the patents were invalid. By amendment some three years later, the Government attacked five of the patents (the three foam patents, the perforated lath patent and one of the metallized board patents) alleging that these were invalid and void as follows (R. 349):

> "46a. Many of the patents mentioned and described in said license agreements by which the said combination has been, and is being carried out in part, are process or machine patents. The article and product claims of Roos patents No. 2,017,022, No. 2,079,338, No. 2,080,009, No. 1,914,345, and No. 1,938,354 mentioned and described in said license agreements; and said patents, are each invalid and void for each of the following reasons: (a) there is no real invention or ~~novelty~~ in the claims of said patents; (b) the claims of said patents disclose no patentable invention in view of the prior art at the time the respective applications were filed; (c) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were shown and described in printed publications in the United States more than two years prior to the filing of the respective applications; (d) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents are inoperative and devoid of novelty or utility; (e) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were abandoned by the inventor and he was guilty of laches before the respective applications were filed; (f) the alleged inventions described in the claims of said patents were not reduced to practice until after other inventors had invented and reduced the same to practice and applied for patents thereon; (g) the said alleged inventions are described in ambiguous and not in properly clear, concise and exact terms and; (h) the defendants have been informed of the invalidity of the claims of the said patents and have unreasonably failed to file in the United States Patent Office any disclaimer of such claims.[56] The said patents mentioned and described in the said license agreements, even assuming they are valid, are not basic article or product patents and do not singly or all together cover completely the business of mining and selling gypsum, or cover completely gypsum board, which is one of the forms in which unpatented gypsum is sold by the defendants, but at most constitute minor additions to the established and unpatented art of making gypsum board and afford no legal justification for the said combination."

By this amendment the Government sought a judicial determination that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents and that they were for that reason invalid.

On motion of defendants before the commencement of trial, the Court dismissed paragraph 46(a) except the first and last sentences thereof (R. 369-395), reported at 53 F. Supp. 889.

The precise question considered by the Court below was whether the Government in an anti-trust case could allege in its complaint that patents issued by it were invalid for reasons other than fraud and thereby predicate a charge of unlawful conduct upon a basis that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents.[56a] Stated differently, the Court below

[56]The Government waived and withdrew the charge contained in Subdivision (h) (R. 434, 3931).

[56a]The three Roos foam patents were issued after proceedings in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia under R. S. 4915, 35 U. S. C. 63 (R. 365). Bayer v. Rice, 75 Fed. (2d) 238 (Ct. of App. Dist. of Col. 1934). It is submitted that such proceedings have the effect of an adjudication of patentability. Hill v. Wooster, 132 U. S. 693 (1890).

held that the Government could not attack its own patent grants and seek to have them adjudicated invalid on grounds such as lack of invention, novelty or utility, which matters are delegated by statute to the Commissioner of Patents for determination prior to the issuance of the patents.

In connection with the allegations of paragraph 46(a), the Court below noted that the patents were not attacked upon the ground that they were invalid because being used in violation of the Sherman Act but that, conversely, the defendants were violating the Sherman Act, through patent license agreements, because the patents were invalid. In short, paragraph 46(a) requested the Court to sit in review on the Commissioner of Patents and determine that the Patent Office erred in issuing the patents and that as a consequence the defendants violated the anti-trust laws for having sought in good faith to enjoy the privileges of the patent grants (R. 371-2).

The Court below ruled that the Government had no right, statutory or otherwise, to attack the validity of the patents. It did not, however, either in its ruling with respect to 46(a)[57] or in its rulings on the submission of evidence during the trial of the case,[58] foreclose the Government from introducing evidence on the topics therein mentioned as might be relevant or material to other issues in the case. And by sustaining the first and last sentences of paragraph 46(a), the Court below gave the Government full

[58]For example, in connection with the perforated lath patent, evidence was admitted, as bearing on the question of good faith, that one of the licensees, Certain-teed, had been advised prior to its acceptance of a license that the patent was lacking in invention. (Exhibits 601, 602, R. 1204, 1291, 3452).

opportunity to attempt to narrow the scope of the patents in question or show that they were not basic or of any substantial value.[59]

(a) The Government having made the Patent Grant after due Administrative Action Should not be Allowed to Question its own Action in an Anti-Trust Proceeding.

Under Constitutional authority, Congress has set up an extensive system for the issuance of patents designed to protect both the inventor and the public. Every patent application is studied and considered by experienced examiners skilled in the particular art of the invention.

The law provides for a Commissioner of Patents, assistant commissioners and examiners of "competent legal knowledge and scientific ability."[60] When a patent application is filed, the Commissioner "shall cause an examination to be made of the alleged new invention or discovery; and if on such examination it shall appear that the claimant is justly entitled to a patent under the law, and the same is sufficiently useful and important, the Commissioner shall issue a patent therefor."[61] Where necessary, hearings are held and testimony is taken.[62] Appeals within the Patent Office are allowed to the Board of Appeals.[63] A further appeal is allowable to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.[64] In the alternative, a suit in equity may be brought to compel the issuance of a patent.[65]

The Government, through the Commissioner of Patents, is acting in its sovereign capacity in determining questions of patentability and issuing patents under these provisions of the patent law. In issuing patents, the Government makes a solemn covenant that the applicant shall have an exclusive right to the prescribed invention for 17 years, the patentee bargaining on the other hand fully to disclose his invention so as to increase the knowledge of the art.

By seeking to contend now that the Commissioner of Patents erred in issuing the patents in suit, the Government is at the very least breaching its solemn covenant with the patentee and those dealing with him in reliance upon the patent grant. Certainly a court of equity should not condone such conduct. As stated in the opinion of the Court below (R. 385):

> "No private litigant could expect relief in a court of equity upon the premise of a broken promise on his own part. A fortiori the Government should not. On the contrary it should scrupulously keep and perform each of its own covenants. One of the first objectives and essentials of good government is order and certainty in relations between government and citizen. This cannot be secured if the Government itself is not to be depended upon to abide its grants, even if they have been improvidently or erroneously made. The attack of the Government upon the patents under paragraph 46(a) is based upon the extraordinary premise that the Government can in one department issue a grant and in another question its own action, in the absence of charges of fraud in inducing the action. Common principles of justice and fairness in dealings between patent applicants and the Government give patentees a right to assume that their patents are valid insofar as any attack on > them by the Government which issued them is concerned, unless the attack is for fraud in the obtaining of the patents."

It has become well settled by this Court and throughout the law that while courts may review actions of an administrative agency when they go beyond legal authority, or have been arbitrary, or induced to act by fraud, there is no authority, at least in the absence of statute, to review the exercise of discretion or judgment by such administrative agencies. Welch v. Obispo Oil Co., 301 U. S. 190 (1937); Leach v. Carlile, 258 U. S. 138 (1922); Houston v. St. Louis Independent Packing Co., 249 U. S. 479 (1919).

The foregoing doctrine has been applied in preventing the Government from attempting to cancel a patent on grounds other than fraud. United States v. Bell Telephone Company, 167 U. S. 224 (1897). In that case the Government brought a bill in equity to set aside and cancel a patent covering a telephone transmitter on grounds of both fraud and lack of patentability. It was held that the Government failed to establish the alleged fraud. As to the grounds of patentability, the Court held against the Government upon the ground that "the judgment of the Patent Office, the tribunal established by Congress to determine such questions, was adverse to the contention of the Government, and such judgment cannot be reviewed in this suit".[66] This Court stated (167 U. S. at p. 267):

> "But, further, Congress has establishd the Patent Office, and thereby created a tribunal to pass upon all questions of novelty and utility. It has given to that office exclusive jurisdiction in the first instance, and has specifically provided under what circumstances its decisions may be reviewed, either collaterally or by appeal. As said in Butterworth v. Hoe, 112 U. S. 50, 67, 5 Sup. Ct. 25, 34: 'That it was intended that the Commissioner of Patents, in issuing or withholding patents, in reissues, interferences, and extensions, should exercise quasi-judicial functions, is apparent from the nature of the examinations and decisions he is required to make, and the modes provided by law, according to which, exclusively, they may be reviewed.'

"Sections 4911-4914, Rev. St., grant appeals in certain cases to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. It is true those sections do not authorize appeals on behalf of the Government, but the failure so to do may be evidence that Congress thought the Government ought not to interfere, and because it believed it had made ample provision for securing the rights of all without the intervention of the Government. Section 4915, Rev. St., authorizes a suit in equity on behalf of an applicant for a patent whose application has been refused. Morgan v. Daniels, 153 U. S. 120, 14 Sup. Ct. 772, presented a controversy under that section, and in the opinion, on page 124, 153 U. S., and page 773, 14 Sup. Ct., we said: 'It is a controversy between two individuals over a question of fact which has once been settled by a special tribunal, entrusted with full power in the premises. As such it might be well argued, were it not for the terms of this statute, that the decision of the Patent Office was a finality upon every matter of fact.'

"It is true that all these sections refer to proceedings between individuals, but the Government is as much bound by the laws of Congress as an individual, and when Congress has created a tribunal to which it has given exclusive determination in the first instance of certain questions of fact, and has specifically provided under what circumstances that determination may be reviewed by the courts, the argument is a forcible one that such determination should be held conclusive upon the Government, subject to the same limitations as apply in suits between individuals."

In conclusion, the Court stated that in prior proceedings[67] it had affirmed the right of the Government to proceed by suit in equity against one who had fraudulently obtained a patent but pointed out that (p. 269):

"* * * there was no attempt to define the character of the fraud, or deceit or mistake, or the extent of the error as to power which must be established before a decree could be entered cancelling the patent. It was not affirmed that proof of any fraud, or deceit, or the existence of any error on the part of the officers as to the extent of their power, or that any mistake in the instrument, was sufficient to justify a decree of cancellation. Least of all was it intended to be affirmed that the courts of the United States, sitting as courts of equity, could entertain jurisdiction of a suit by the United States to set aside a patent for an invention on the mere ground of error of judgment on the part of the patent officials. That would be an attempt on the part of the courts in collateral attack to exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Patent Office, although no appellate jurisdiction has been by the statutes conferred. We are of opinion, therefore, that the question, as stated, is not open for consideration in this case."

[67] United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315 (1888) and United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 159 U. S. 548 (1895).

The Government's attack on the validity of patents in the present case constitutes precisely the same attempt to have this Court exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Patent Office which was rejected in the Telephone case. The attempt should be similarly rejected here.

There are many similar rulings by this Court in respect of the comparable determinations of land patents. In the case of United States v. Coronado Beach Company, 255 U. S. 472 (1921), the Government sought by a bill in equity to ascertain the rights of private parties in an island in the harbor of San Diego, California, and to condemn the entire island for public purposes. A dispute arose as to the extent of the original grant, the Government charging that it went only to the shore line and the company contending that it included the tide lands. The Government attempted to show that the extent of the original land patent was erroneous, but Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for this Court said (p. 488):

> "The grant to Carrillo was bounded 'west by the anchorage for ships' and although it well may be that in view of the purpose set out in his petition and the circumstances the grant could have been construed more narrowly, that was a matter to be passed upon and when the decree and the patent went in favor of the grantee it is too late to argue that they are not conclusive against the United States. It is said that the field notes, not put in evidence at the trial, show that the deep water line was not surveyed, but was taken from the Coast Survey maps. But however arrived at it was adopted by the United States for its grant and it cannot now be collaterally impeached."

See also Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 234 U. S. 669 (1914); Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447 (1882); Mowry v. Whitney, 81 U. S. 434 (1871).

The Government argues that it really isn't attempting to attack the patents, or obtain a cancelation thereof, but is merely attempting to show the fact of invalidity. It is submitted that this is an argument based on phraseology rather than substance. It has no merit. Upon the argument of the motion to dismiss paragraph 46(a) the Government conceded that it was seeking a judicial determination that the patents were invalid. On several previous occasions as well as in its present brief, the Government has contended it made no such concession but the record is clear that it did.[68] Indeed, the Government not only conceded

[68]Upon the argument of the motion to dismiss paragraph 46(a) the following colloquy between Government counsel and Justice Stephens and Justice Garrett took place (R. 416-7):

"Justice Stephens. But we would have to make a judicial determination, would we not? The defense to price-fixing here is that price-fixing is proper under the General Electric case because it is price-fixing which occurs under patent license agreements. You assert that the patent license agreements are not valid for two reasons; first, because they go beyond the corporate confines of the General Electric case decision; and second, because of the patents on which they are founded being invalid. It seems to me that that goes to the very gist of the contentions. Have we got to reach a judicial determination that these patents are invalid, and if we do what is the difference between that and cancelling them, except in the form of the ruling?

"Mr. Steffen. I would say that you are quite right, that you would have to make a judicial determination. The difference is one in remedy. We don't ask to have it cancelled. Our only authority, as I see it here, is to enforce the Sherman Act, and that is all that we ask, that such remedies be granted as are necessary to make sure that the central policy of the Sherman Act is fully carried out.

but asserted the point. But whether or not the concession was made, the fact remains that by paragraph 46(a) the Government sought a judicial determination that the patents were invalid. No device of language will alter that fact. As the Trial Court noted (R. 3932):

> "The Government cannot by any contention or form of words or affidavit avoid the plain fact that in asking for a judicial determination of invalidity of the patents for the reasons charged in paragraph 46(a), it was in legal effect asking for a determination that the Commissioner erred in issuing them, because if the court determined that they were invalid it would of necessity have determined that the Commissioner erred in issuing them."

(b) There is no Statutory Authority for the Attack on Patents.

The patent statutes admittedly do not authorize an attack upon the validity of patents as alleged in paragraph

And if, in the course of that, it is necessary to say that patent number so and so is invalid, and therefore their price-fixing scheme is invalid based on that, that would be a judicial determination, but we do not ask to have the patent cancelled.

"I might point out, Judge Garrett, that the other ground is that we are not proceeding on any question of fraud, which was granted in the American Bell Telephone case as being a proper means of proceeding.

"Justice Garrett. Yes, I understand that. The particular thing I was inquiring about is that I was curious to see if there was a judicial determination and that the patent was invalid, what is the difference between that and an order to cancel it. It has the same effect, doesn't it? That throws that process open to the public and destroys the value of the patent as far as its owner is concerned?

"Mr. Steffen. I should think so, * * *"

46(a).. On the contrary the legislative history of the patent law establishes that Congress never intended that the Government should be able to attack its own patent grant as here attempted.

Since the enactment of the first patent statute in 1790, Congress has provided for the granting of exclusive rights to inventors to make, use and sell their discoveries and for corresponding rights in certain members of the public to question the rights of patentees.

In the beginning, patents were issued upon petition to the Secretary of State, the Secretary for the Department of War and the Attorney General who granted a patent whenever they or two of them regarded the invention or discovery as sufficiently useful and important. At this time there was no system for carefully examining the patent applications of inventors nor for testing the claims by examiners skilled in the prior art. To counteract this situation, the law provided that within one year (later three years) of the issuance of a patent, anyone might seek a repeal of the patent by showing that it "was obtained surreptitiously or upon false suggestion," or "that the patentee was not the first and true inventor or discoverer" and, as in all later patent statutes, a defendant in any action brought by a patentee for infringement might plead that the patent was invalid.[69]

This situation remained without substantial change until 1836 when the Patent Office was first established. The 1836 law[70] created the office of Commissioner of Patents with a staff of examining clerks, a draftsman and a machinist, and the Commissioner was directed to make an examination of the alleged new inventions to ascertain whether the same had been previously discovered by any other person or described in any printed publication. The Commissioner was further authorized to determine whether the invention was useful and important and properly described in the application. The section permitting a defendant in an infringement suit to question the validity of patents was preserved but the former section permitting anyone to seek a cancelation of a patent was repealed. In addition, the courts were authorized to declare patents invalid in suits between owners of interfering patents. The general framework of the patent law of 1836 remains unchanged to this time.

[69] 1 Statutes at Large 109.
[70] 5 Statutes at Large 117.

The Congressional intention is clear from the foregoing. Prior to the formation of the Patent Office, when there was no procedure for careful surveillance of the issuing of patents, Congress granted broad powers in all the public to bring proceedings to invalidate and cancel patents. Later, however, those powers became unnecessary, and were repealed. From that time the instances when the validity of patents could be attacked were limited. For the most part, the issue was raised in infringement suits.

In 1910 a law was passed permitting suits for patent infringement to be instituted against the United States in the Court of Claims.[71] This law specifically provided that in such an action the United States could avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, that might be pleaded in an action for infringement. The Government relies on this circumstance to show that Congress was not adverse on moral grounds to permit the Government to challenge its own patent grant. In this instance the moral question is of little substance since prior to the Act the Government was not liable for infringement at all and, in granting relief to patentees whose rights had been infringed by the Government, Congress saw no reason to place patentees in a more favorable position than they would have occupied in respect of a non-governmental infringer.

But we regard the statute in question as of significance for another reason. It shows that Congress deemed it necessary, after permitting a suit against the Government for infringement, specifically to reserve the right to the Government to challenge validity. The law already provided that "in any action for infringement the defendant" might show that the patent was invalid.[72] In the normal case, that law surely was broad enough to protect the Government since it provided for the defense of invalidity on behalf of any defendant in an infringement suit. The reason for making special provision for such a defense by the Government in this instance was that Congress recognized that the Government was in a special situation since it had itself granted the patent.

In the last few years several bills have been introduced specifically authorizing the Government to attack patents in an anti-trust case. None of these bills has become law.[73]

The Government contends that Congress gave it authority to attack patents when it enacted Section 4 of the Sherman Act authorizing the Attorney General to enjoin violations of the anti-trust law. This argument is faulty because the Government can only assert here that the Sherman Act has been violated after the Court has determined the patents to be invalid. There is a bar against the suit at the threshold.

On the basis of the foregoing, it is submitted that Congress never intended that the decisions of the Patent Office on matters properly before it for determination should be questioned by another branch of the Government. For reasons similar to those urged above in connection with changing the rule of the General Electric case, this Court should not now change the law to subject patentees to governmental attacks via anti-trust law proceedings. As expressed by the Court below (R. 390):

> "The Government's contentions in respect of the right to attack the validity of the patents under paragraph 46(a) of the complaint really amount to an assertion not that it is, but that it ought to be, the law that notwithstanding the grant of a patent by the Commissioner of Patents the Government may test the validity of the patent in the courts. The Commissioner and his staff are asserted to be incapable, because of press of business and the conditions under which the Patent Office operates, including unavoidable ignorance of anticipation, of reaching conclusively dependable determinations in respect of the right to a patent; hence recourse to the courts to correct the Commissioner's action should be allowed, so it is urged. It is to be noted that this argument is as valid for direct attack as for incidental. If the assertions of the Government in respect of the limitations of the Patent Office are correct—upon this the court does not assume to pass—and if such limitations cannot otherwise be corrected, a case may perhaps be made for the devising of some test outside the Patent Office of the validity of patents. But it does not follow that it is within the proper function of the courts to devise it. There is of course a recognized place for growth of the law through judicial decision in the "interstitial" or borderline case, but radical departures or innovations are not properly made by courts. Judges are not appointed in representative capacity for the purpose of law making; and judicial innovations upon the law are especially to be avoided when they would upset transactions entered into on the faith of the law as it is. Conceivably there should be Congressional action creating a statutory right in the Government to test in the courts the correctness of determinations of the Commissioner of Patents, some such remedy perhaps as is now afforded patent applicants under Rev. Stat. § 4915 (1875), 35 U. S. C. § 63 (1940). But such a remedy if created by statute would undoubtedly be made prospective in effect, that is to say, would apply only to patents issued after the passage of the act. Moreover, the actions permitted under such a statute would properly be made subject to a limitation in time, so that after a given period the rights under a patent would be secure to the patentee and those dealing with him so far as interference by the Government was concerned. It is not within the proper function of courts to open the door by judicial innovation to Government attack on patents, retroactive in effect and without limitation in time, and thus to unsettle industrial security so far as it is based on the patent system."

(c) The Authorities Relied upon by the Government do not Authorize the Attack on the Patents.

As the Court below stated in its opinion, there is no controlling judicial decision directly in point. The Government relies on United States v. Porcelain Appliance Corp., Unreported (N. D. Ohio, E. D. Sept. 9, 1926), an anti-trust proceeding, where the Court denied a motion by defendants to strike from the complaint allegations pertaining to the validity and scope of patents. The Court there said that, while the suit was not one to cancel patents and it was probably beyond the scope of all possible issues to decree patents or patent claims to be void, it was conceivable that invalid patents or patents of limited coverage, in the light of the prior art, might be wrongfully used in creating an illegal combination, and that whether the case was of such a nature as to permit or require inquiry into such questions could not be determined on the motion to strike. The Court did not consider the question whether the Government can raise an issue as to the validity of its own action in granting patents.

In United States v. Standard Oil Co., 33 Fed. (2d) 617 (D. C. Ill. 1929), reversed 283 U. S. 163 (1931), an anti-trust case involving alleged restraints of trade arising from patent license agreements on cracking oil, the trial was conducted before a Master. During the course of the proceedings the Government offered evidence to show the lack of patentability of two of the patents. After objections, the Master certified the question to the District Court (consisting of three Circuit Judges under the Expediting Act) for a ruling and the Court directed that the evidence be received.[74] However, when the Master filed his report at the close of the trial he held that the Government could not attack the validity of the patents.[75] The District Court, in considering the Master's report, stated that it was "divided respecting the right of the government to attack the validity of the patents in these proceedings" (33 Fed. (2d) 617, at p. 623). This Court did not pass on the question. The case constitutes no ruling of any value on the question now before this Court.

Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173, holds that a patent licensee sued for royalties is not estopped from counterclaiming for a declaratory judgment that the patents covered by the license were invalid. This Court held that under the circumstances of that case where price-fixing provisions were contained in the license, notwithstanding the rules of estoppel the defendant licensee could challenge the validity of the patents as asserted in its counterclaim. The Government argues that since this case and the similar rulings in Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394 (1947), and MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402 (1947) permit a private person to show invalidity notwithstanding an agreement not to do so, the Government ought to be able to do the same thing. But obviously these decisions do not reach the heart of the question, i.e. whether the Government itself may attack its own patent grant. Other cases, Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 (1940), United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241 (1942), and United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265 (1942), have language implications which suggest to the Government that this Court might hold that it might attack patents in a Sherman Act case. In each instance no question of the validity of patents was raised and the language relied upon is mere dicta.

For the purpose of this question we may treat the amended complaint as charging only that the license agreements, though valid on their face and without the scope of the Sherman Act, are nevertheless invalid because the patents are invalid. This, as shown, is an attempt by the Government to obtain a judicial determination of the validity of the patents.

It has been held by this Court that in an action to enforce a license agreement with price control defendants may defend on the ground that the patents are invalid. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 88, supra; Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Co., 317 U. S. 173, 177, supra. It is important however to bear in mind that these cases involved only the right of a private party to defend against enforcement by the court of such a contract. There the judgment is a denial of future enforcement and is binding only upon the parties to the suit.

No such question arises here because (a) this is not an action to enforce a contract, (b) the Government granted the patents and may not seek a judicial determination of their validity for want of invention or other reason alleged in paragraph 46(a), and (c) the use of the patents by the defendants for the very purpose for which issued could not constitute a combination or conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act.

A patent, when issued, constitutes a solemn grant of the Government of the exclusive right to the invention, including the right to license others with price control. The patent has the presumption of validity and can not be attacked collaterally by the Government which granted it, nor does the law provide for any sort of direct suit by the Government to have a patent declared illegal for want of invention or any other reason except fraud on the Patent Office. It follows that no court has jurisdiction to review the action of the Commissioner or to adjudicate the validity of the patents for any reason alleged in the amendment.

The only right of the United States to bring a civil action to enjoin is found in Section 4 of the Act, wherein the several district courts are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the Act at the suit of the Attorney General. Such an action may be maintained only where it is shown by the complaint that there is an unlawful combination, conspiracy or monopoly prohibited by Sections 1, 2 or 3 of the Act, to be enjoined. Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344, 377. There could be no violation of the Act by th exercise of the monopoly granted by the Government, nor could any intent to violate the Act be inferred therefrom. Swift v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, 396. The Government, in such a suit, may not anticipate a violation of the Act by seeking to review the action of the Commissioner and to obtain a judicial determination of the validity of the patents.

As stated, the use of the patents by the defendants for the very purpose for which they were issued could establish no combination or conspiracy to violate the Act. The patents, as between the United States and defendants, carry the presumption of validity. As shown, there is no court to which the United States may go to have the validity of the patents determined for want of invention or other reason alleged in paragraph 46(a) because the Congress has seen fit to withhold the right. To say the least, the Government's position is inconsistent, immoral and without any legislative support whatsoever.

(d) The Government's Attack on the Roos foam Patents is Without Substance.

In view of the importance of the Roos foam board invention as shown by the record in this case, the doctrine of Slawson v. Grand Street R. R. Co., 107 U. S. 649 (Gov. brief, pp. 283, 288) has no application here. Nor are the claims of the Roos patents open to attack because of functionality or indefiniteness, which were the fatal features of the claims held invalid in General Electric Co. v. Wabash Appliance Corporation, 304 U. S. 364, and United Carbon v. Binney Co., 317 U. S. 228, relied upon by the Government in its attack on the claims of the Roos patents (Gov. brief, pp. 288-289). Thus in the Wabash case the tungsten filaments were not described by their properties, but by functional statements which called for a filament of tungsten > "made up mainly of a number of comparatively large grains of such size and contour as to prevent substantial sagging and offsetting during a normal or commercially useful life for such a lamp."

Similarly in the Binney case, the claims were directed to what was otherwise an old product, carbon black "in the form of commercially uniform, comparatively small, rounded, smooth aggregates having a spongy or porous interior." Obviously this was too vague and indefinite and does not bear any resemblance to the claims of the Roos patents.

In the present case the Roos claims are clear and unequivocal, and not functional, as a brief analysis thereof will show. For example, Claim 9 of the basic Roos patent, No. 2,017,022, (quoted supra, p. 52) definitely specifies, first, that the product is a "light weight building material." This contrasts it with heavy concrete, bricks, stone, iron, steel, etc. Furthermore, it is "composed of a hard mass of cellular structure", which is made of a "set cementitious material." This defines the nature of the structure as being of set cement encompassing cells or voids within it.

These cells are then more definitely described as "foam cells permanently fixed therein" and which "possess their original form." The claim further defines these foam cells as "arranged throughout the structure in foam-like formation." This negatives the inclusion in the structure of merely heterogeneous pores or individually scattered holes or voids, such as might have been accidentally produced by the mere inclusion of some trapped air, as disclosed in the prior art products of Sanford and Luttgen, referred to by the Government (Gov. brief, p. 238).

Any one even slightly skilled in the building material art will recognize the nature of the product as being a set cementitious material (such as set gypsum) which, when broken open, will disclose therein voids in foam-like formation. Thus mere visual inspection will reveal the nature of the product and will permit of a comparison thereof with the claims. This is all the law requires. Eibel Co. v. Paper Co., 261 U. S. 45, 65.

The second Roos patent, No. 2,079,338 claims the product there disclosed in even more definite terms. Thus Claim 1 (R. 108) not only positively recites the presence of bubbles, but further states that the walls thereof are reinforced by a colloidal agent from a given group. The purpose of such reinforcement is further stated, but this is not a functional statement. It is only a more detailed definition of the bubble walls.

The third Roos foam patent, No. 2,080,009, is specific to wallboard having a porous body which is like that of the two previous Roos patents. The claims, including claim 10 which is the main subject of the Government's criticism, are definite and precise and entirely proper.

We submit that the claims of the Roos foam board patents adequately, clearly and definitely cover the gypsum board involved in the present case.

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, vs. UNITED STATES GYPSUM COMPANY, NATIONAL GYPSUM COMPANY, CERTAIN-TEED PRODUCTS CORPORATION, THE CELOTEX CORPORATION, EBSARY GYPSUM COMPANY, INC., NEWARK PLASTER COMPANY, SAMUEL M. PETITION FOR REHEARING

Come now the above named appellees, and present this, their petition for a rehearing of the above entitled cause, and, in support thereof, respectfully state the following as grounds therefor.

I.

This Court's Holding that a Prima Facie Conspiracy Was Established by Reason of the Plurality of Licenses Fails to Give Proper Effect to the Rule of the General Electric Case, as Recognized by the Court in the Line Material Decision.

At this juncture of the case the principal question is whether the Court was correct in holding that the license agreements and the bulletins issued under them were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of a conspiracy among the defendants to make "industry-wide" licenses with price limitation, in violation of the Sherman Act. We maintain that under the Patent Laws of the United States and the rule laid down in the Bement and General Electric[1] cases followed by this Court since 1902, United States Gypsum had the right to license its competitors with price limitation and the defendant competitors had the right to accept such licenses. The license agreements and bulletins were protected by the monopoly of the patents.

(a) It is now settled that a patentee has the right to license a competitor to make and sell a patented product in interstate commerce and to fix or control the price and terms and conditions of sale at which the product is sold. It is recognized in the Line Material[2] case that the adjustment between the lawful restraint of trade of the patent monopoly and the illegal restraint prohibited broadly by the Sherman Act has reached the point that a patentee may validly license a competitor to make and vend, with a price limitation, under the rule of the General Electric case. It follows that the patentee may within the rule grant the same license to any number of his competitors.

Within the rule as stated, in order to have practical application, the patentee must necessarily have the right to discuss with his prospective licensee the advantages or disadvantages of the proposed license both to himself and the licensee, their desire to enter into the license, the stabilization of price to be attained, and the provision for price limitation, and finally to execute and deliver the written license as previously negotiated and agreed to. If this is legal, then duplication of the same negotiations with other competitor licensees is legal.

Any agreement or combination which operates as a restraint of trade or commerce among the several states is a violation of the Sherman Act except as otherwise provided by Act of Congress, such as the monopoly reserved to an inventor under the Patent Laws. Thus a single agreement between a patentee and a licensee competitor with price limitation would be as well a violation of the Sherman Act as a plurality of such licenses except for the monopoly of the patent. It follows that no distinction can be drawn between a single license to a competitor with price limitation and a plurality of such licenses with any number or all of patentee's competitors.

The Court, in the Line Material case, although urged by the government to do so, refused to overrule the General Electric case and proceeded to determine the issues on the assumption that the General Electric case continues as a precedent. As we read the opinion of Mr. Justice Reed in that case and the dissent of Mr. Justice Burton with whom the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Frankfurter concurred, they all accept the rule of the General Electric case that a patentee may validly license a competitor to make and vend the patented product with a price limitation. This, as shown, must necessarily include any one or more competitors and a plurality of such licenses is entitled to the protection of the Patent Laws even if it covers the industry. It seems to us that any contrary view involves an economic or social question, not a legal one, and is a proper subject for the Congress, not the Courts.

(b) The opinion, without reference to the declarations, shows that as the result of the settlement of substantial claims for damages on account of infringement of the Utzman patents and the desire of certain manufacturers to avoid infringement of patents which the Court of Appeals had sustained and held infringed, licenses covering the Utzman board and machine patents and other patents were originally negotiated and granted to seven board manufacturers between 1926 and 1929. Subsequently the licensees and two other board manufacturers accepted licenses covering the same group of then pending patents and applications, including the so-called bubble and starch inventions, which licenses became effective upon the approval of the sale of the starch patent to United States Gypsum by the several district courts in which Universal's receiverships were pending. The government introduced in evidence all of the licenses and the price bulletins issued under them. Upon this record the District Court held at the close of plaintiff's case that plaintiff had failed to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy and ruled that the declarations of certain of the defendants were admissible only against those making them.

This Court, in rejecting the ruling that the declarations were admissible only against the defendants making them, said that a consideration of that point really involves the heart of the case, since the treatment of the declarations may vitally affect the outcome; that some may have doubts as to whether the agreements and bulletins alone are sufficient to establish a conspiracy but the admission of the separate declarations against all greatly strengthens the government's position (Slip op., p. 23). The Court then concluded that the industry-wide license agreements entered into with knowledge on the part of licensor and licensees of the adherence of others, with the control over prices and methods of distribution through the agreements and the bulletins, were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy to make industry-wide licenses with price limitation.

Thus, notwithstanding the holding in the Line Material case that the adjustment between the Patent Law and the Sherman Act has reached the point that a patentee may validly license a competitor to make and vend with a price limitation, it was held in this case that a plurality of licenses with price limitation was illegal. It is clear to us that the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Burton in Line Material, joined in by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Frankfurter, recognized not only the validity of such a license to a competitor licensee but the validity of a plurality of such licenses, within the rule of the General Electric case. There is no logic or reason for holding that one or any number short of all competitors may receive such a license and that the others may not.

In a group of such licenses separately negotiated and granted, the resulting monopoly divided among the patentee and his competitors is nevertheless the same monopoly originally granted by the patent. Obviously in such a case both the patentee and each of his licensees desire the license, seek the advantage of the price limitation, and in fact trade the disadvantages for the advantages, or vice versa, and agree to price control, the same as between the patentee and his licensee in the case of a single license.

Could it possibly be said that the repetition of similar desires, discussions or agreements with each of the other licensees resulting in the execution of a group of licenses with price limitation was beyond the rule of the General Electric case? If not, as it seems clear enough, is it not equally clear that "industry-wide" license agreements so entered into with knowledge on the part of the licensor and licensees of the adherence of others, establish no prima facie case of conspiracy?

(c) It was stated in the opinion that in this case each licensee, as is shown by uncontradicted references to the meetings and discussions that were preliminary to the execution of the licenses, could not have failed to be aware of the intention of United States Gypsum and the other licensees to make the arrangements for licenses "industry-wide" (Slip op., p. 23). As we view it, the statement is not supported by the record, nor could it be inferred from the licenses introduced in evidence by the government. But even if conceded arguendo, could the intention of the United States Gypsum and its licensees to make licenses "industry-wide" with respect to the patent monopoly violate the Sherman Act? If the rule of the General Electric case recognizes the right, as we insist it must, of the patentee to license the industry, how could the intention of the patentee disclosed to its licensees or the intention of the patentee and some or all of its licensees to make the licenses "industry-wide", take the case out of the rule of the General Electric case? There certainly was no evidence of any agreement between the licensor and any of its licensees to do so nor could it be inferred from anything in the record, but if it could be, it would not be unlawful if we are correct in our position that plurality of such licenses with competitors is within the rule of the case.

The District Court was right when it said[3] such a license agreement ordinarily, and when the prices are (as in the General Electric case) a part of the license contract necessarily, involves negotiation and discussion between the licensor and the licensee and agreement upon the terms and conditions, the purpose to execute and carry out the agreement, combined action in signing the agreement and in performing the obligations thereof with knowledge that it will result in a stabilized and presumably profitable price for the patented product as between the parties and in the industry, and knowledge that it will result in a divided patent monopoly.

(d) It was said in the opinion that if the District Court had thought that a plan such as is evidenced by the license agreements and the bulletins was illegal under the Sherman Act, it might have had a different conclusion on the question of the admissibility of the declarations of some appellees against all; that its position stemmed logically from its understanding of the General Electric case (Slip op., p. 24). It seems clear that if the District Court's interpretation of the General Electric case in this respect is correct, its position with respect to the declarations as binding only upon those who made them is correct. It is equally clear that if this Court accepts the interpretation that plurality of licenses to competitors with price limitation is within the rule of the General Electric case, then its ruling that the license agreements and the bulletins make a prima facie case of conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act is incorrect.

The government charged, as stated by the Court, that the defendants acted in concert in entering into the license agreements and that as a result of such concert of action competition was eliminated by fixing the price of patented board. How could concert of action in the negotiations for such licenses result in eliminating competition by unlawfully fixing the price of patented board if the negotiations contemplated a license under valid patents within the rule of the General Electric case? The acceptance of that theory is but to hold that a plurality of such licenses is not within the rule of the General Electric case, a thing we have demonstrated is without logic or reason so long as the rule of the case as interpreted by this Court in the Line Material case recognizes the right of a patentee to license his competitor with price limitation. To so hold is inconsistent and in conflict with the statement that the adjustment between the lawful restraint of trade of the patent monopoly and the illegal restraint prohibited broadly by the Sherman Act has reached the point that a patentee may validly license a competitor to make and vend, with a price limitation, under the General Electric case.

It was stated in this Court's opinion in the Gypsum case that the opinions in the Line Material case, whatever may be the different views expressed, make clear that the District Court's interpretation of the General Electric case differs from that of this Court; that with its interpretation of the rule of the General Electric case, the District Court was not required to balance the privilege of United States Gypsum and its licensees under the patent grants with the prohibitions of the Sherman Act against combinations and attempts to monopolize (Slip op., p. 25). In the Line Material case the Court, as shown, accepted the rule of the General Electric case but held that by cross-licensing between Southern and Line the dominant Lemmon and the subservient Schultz patents were combined to fix prices, in which arrangement all of the defendants joined by virtue of the granting and accepting of the licenses with price limitation. The Court, according to its view of that case, was required to balance the privilege of the licensor and its licensees under the patent grants with the prohibition of the Sherman Act against a monopoly or restraint not within the rule of the General Electric case. It seems reasonably clear from all that was said in the opinion that the Court would have affirmed the District Court except for the cross-licensing feature of the case. If that case, instead of involving cross-licensing which was the turning point in the opinion, had involved merely plurality of licenses, the Court would have been compelled under the language of its own opinion to affirm the District Court, for did not the Court say that the adjustment between the lawful restraint of the patent monopoly and the illegal restraint prohibited broadly by the Sherman Act had reached the point, as the precedents now stand, that a patentee may validly license a competitor to make and vend with a price limitation under the General Electric case?

As shown above, it follows logically that a plurality of licenses, even "industry-wide", is within the rule of the General Electric case. If this Court accepted, as we think it did in the Line Material case, the plurality rule as within the rule of the General Electric case, then, as hereinbefore stated, it can not consistently hold in this case that the "industry-wide" license agreements and the bulletins are sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy. The net practical result after the negotiations are completed in a case involving plurality of licenses is a group of licenses to competitors under the protection of the Patent Laws and therefore within the rule of the General Electric case.

It follows that the Court erred in concluding that the "industry-wide" license agreements in this case and the bulletins were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy in entering into the licenses, and therefore erred in ruling that the declarations of each defendant were admissible against the other defendants.

(e) The Court held that in so far as Finding 118 and the subsidiary findings were based by the District Court on its belief that the General Electric rule justified the arrangements or because of a misapplication of Masonite or Interstate Circuit, errors of law occurred which this Court could correct (Slip op., p. 28). The inference is that if the General Electric rule justified plurality of licenses "industry-wide", Finding 118 and the subsidiary findings should not be disturbed. We have demonstrated that whether the licenses are separately negotiated and granted or granted after discussion and knowledge of the plan by licensor and its licensees, there is no logic or reason to say that in the one case the rule of the General Electric case does apply and in the other it does not, since the result is the same in both cases. Under the rule of the General Electric case as recognized by the Court in the Line Material case there could be no error of law in interpreting the General Electric case to support a plurality of licenses among competitors with price limitation, even if "industry-wide", and made with knowledge of the purpose as hereinabove shown.

It only remains to be shown that the doctrines laid down in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, and United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, as to the quantum of proof required for the government to establish its claim that the defendants conspired to violate the Sherman Act, have no application here.

It was said in the opinion that this Court in Interstate concluded that proof of an express understanding that each party would sign the agreements was not a prerequisite to an unlawful conspiracy; that it was sufficient that all of the defendants had engaged in concert of action within the meaning of the Sherman Act to enter into the agreements (Slip op., p. 28). The charge there was that the agreement of the distributors with each other and Interstate to impose the price restrictions upon subsequent run exhibitors and carrying of the agreement into effect with the aid of Interstate and Consolidated, constituted a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. It was not denied that the conspiracy was established if the distributors agreed among themselves to impose the restrictions upon subsequent run exhibitors. The Court held that the acceptance by the competitor distributors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in the plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

In the Gypsum case there was no evidence of concerted action but assuming arguendo that it may be inferred from the licenses and the bulletins, as stated in the opinion, the only concerted action which could be inferred would be that the defendants acted in concert in making industry-wide licenses with price limitation under valid patents. Whether separately negotiated without preliminary discussions or negotiated after meetings and discussions, as stated by the Court, the consequence is the same, a group of patent licenses within the rule of the General Electric case. To hold otherwise is to recognize the rule of plurality of licenses within the rule of the General Electric case but at the same time to destroy it by a wholly impractical application. In the Interstate case the agreement or plan among the distributors and Interstate was in itself an agreement to restrain trade, which if carried out was a restraint of interstate commerce prohibited by the Sherman Act, whereas the concert of action inferred here could only be to make a group of licenses with price limitation under valid patents within the rule of the General Electric case.

In the Masonite case the Court held that a comprehensive del credere plan of distribution made to operate horizontally through an industry where manufacturing competitors fixed prices under the guise of agency arrangements was a violation of the Sherman Act. The fact that the product was a patented article did not save the arrangement because the disposition of the product by Masonite to the del credere was tantamount to a sale and exhausted any patent privileges. From a plurality of similar arrangements among Masonite and its competitors an inference arose that the arrangement resulted from concerted action and the whole plan was held to be illegal.

The very nature of the agreements under which hardboard was disposed of, tantamount to a sale, by Masonite to its competitors, exhausted any patent privilege and an agreement for price limitation with respect to such board was obviously in violation of the Sherman Act. In fact each separate agreement which involved disposition of the board to a competitor with price limitation, constituted a conspiracy between Masonite and the del credere and of course a plurality of such agreements operated as a conspiracy among Masonite and all the del crederes holding and operating under such agreements. No such situation exists here because, as shown, the plurality of license agreements, even though "industry-wide", were nevertheless licenses under valid patents within the rule of the General Electric case.

In short, if we are right in our contention that plurality of licenses with price limitation among competitors, although "industry-wide", is within the rule of the General Electric case, as interpreted by the Court in the Line Material case, then we are not concerned with either the Interstate or the Masonite cases. The license agreements and the price bulletins in that situation could not, by any inference, show a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. Under these circumstances the declarations are binding only upon those who made them.

It is stated in the opinion that in those cases, as here, separate identical agreements were executed between one party and a number of others; that one thing the two cases established is the principle that when a group of competitors enters into a series of separate but similar agreements with competitors or others a strong inference arises that such agreements are the result of concerted action (Slip op., p. 28). But in both cases the inference was with respect to agreements which competitors had no right to make, agreements to restrain trade, the carrying out of which was a restraint of interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. In the Gypsum case the patentee has the right to license its competitors with price limitation and may, as shown, license any or all of its competitors, even "industry-wide", under the rule just recognized by this Court as within the rule of the General Electric case. Separate but similar lawful agreements must still be lawful if the result is lawful and no preliminary agreements or understandings to make them could be unlawful. There is no magic in the phrase "concert of action" for concert of action to do a lawful thing, even among competitors, is still lawful.

The Court also stated in its opinion that the conclusion that the defendants acted in concert follows despite the assumed legality of each separate patent license, for it is a familiar doctrine that lawful acts may become unlawful when taken in concert (Slip op., p. 35). That is true, but not where the concert of action results in a lawful act (such as here if it existed at all), to-wit: a group of licenses with price limitation under valid patents within the rule of the General Electric case. In both the Interstate and the Masonite cases a careful examination discloses that the concert of action was to do an unlawful thing and the result of carrying it out in each case was a direct restraint of commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The rule of those cases inferring concert of action applies only to concert of action to do an unlawful thing. The cases cited by the Court in support of the statement that lawful acts may become unlawful when taken in concert, do not support the proposition that where even competitors take common action to do a lawful thing by lawful means it thereby becomes unlawful, which is illustrated by Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396, where each of the defendants had the right at any time acting alone not to bid against his competitor, but he could not join with his competitors in an agreement not to bid against each other. In these cases the combination was to do an unlawful thing, notwithstanding the right of the individual acting alone to take the same action. We have found no case where the agreement or concert of action resulted in a lawful thing (as here, if there was any concert of action, in the making of valid license agreements) where the court has held it unlawful.

It follows from what we have said that there was no error of law or mistake by the District Court in making Finding 118 and the subsidiary findings, as stated in the opinion, and that such findings should not be disturbed.

(f) We have shown above that plurality of licenses, even industry-wide, with price limitation, even under a plan by a patentee and its competitors to accomplish such licensing, is within the rule of the General Electric case. It necessarily follows, as stated before, that the holding of the Court that the licenses and bulletins are sufficient to establish a prima facie case and that the declarations referred to in the opinion may be received as binding upon all of the defendants is incorrect. But treating the declarations as binding upon the defendants, and giving them all the force the government claims for them, it clearly appears that the licenses and bulletins, together with such declarations, wholly fail to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. The industry-wide licensing, as shown, was in itself valid within the rule of the General Electric case, and preliminary understandings to make the licenses, whether individually or collectively, could not take them out of the rule. The Court said in its opinion that each licensee by the uncontradicted references to the meetings and discussion that were preliminary to the execution of the licenses could not have failed to be aware of the intention of United States Gypsum and the other licensees to make the arrangements for licenses industry-wide; that the industry-wide license agreements entered into with knowledge on the part of licensor and licensees of the adherence of others, with the control over prices and methods of distribution through the agreements and the bulletins, were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy (Slip op., p. 23). There the Court gave to the declarations all the evidentiary value that could be claimed for them and yet it shows that they, according to the government's own view of the case, had the effect of doing no more than making the licensees aware of the intention of the patentee and other of its licensees to make the arrangements for licenses industry-wide. Being preliminary negotiations pointing only to the making of licenses with price limitation under valid patents, in a situation where all of the licensees had a keen interest in protecting their own business affairs, the declarations could not evidence any unlawful concert of action to violate the Sherman Act. This, as pointed out before, is not one of those cases where the concert of action, if it existed at all, was to accomplish an unlawful purpose, but on the contrary had for its purpose a group of licenses with price limitation under valid patents within the rule of the General Electric case.

It follows that Finding 118 and subsidiary findings of the District Court were proper and should not have been disturbed.

II.

The District Court's Findings with Respect to the Collateral Issues Should Not Have Been Rejected.

The District Court made findings adverse to the government's claims that the defendants conspired (a) to eliminate the production of unpatented open-edge board, (b) to eliminate jobbers of patented board, and (c) to stabilize the price of plaster and other unpatented products. In rejecting these findings, we feel that this Court must have overlooked certain evidence and certain business and economic factors which make the findings of the Trial Court inevitable.

(a) Elimination of unpatented open-edge board. This Court has rejected the Trial Court's findings 54, 56, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 89 and 90 adverse to the government's claim that the defendants conspired to eliminate the production of unpatented open-edge board and to the effect that there was no agreement to discontinue the production of such board (Slip op., p. 30). The government assigned no error with respect to findings 62, 63 and 65 (Gov't. Brief, p. 160; R. 4178-4186).

This Court states that it is undisputed that after 1929 the defendants ceased to manufacture open-edge board, and suggests that the government's evidence shows that the parties anticipated that one result of industry wide licensing would be the elimination of open-edge board (Slip op., pp. 19, 31). An agreement or understanding to eliminate open-edge board cannot be inferred from this when the facts are clearly understood.

The government charged that it was essential to price control that unpatented open-edge board be taken off the market. It is important therefore to bear in mind that the licenses originally granted between 1926 and May, 1929, contained no price control except under the Utzman closed-edge patent which expired on August 6, 1929, and that the charge then is that the defendants conspired to eliminate open-edge board in order to support price control of the closed-edge board. Under the November, 1929, licenses, by the express terms of the license there was no price control of the board by reason of the patented closed-edge (FF. 10, R. 4137).

The witnesses testified unqualifiedly that there was no agreement to discontinue the manufacture and sale of open-edge board (C. O. Brown, R. 1236; G. M. Brown, R. 1465; Lenci, R. 2800, 3082; Whittemore, R. 1403; Holland, R. 966). Nothing in the license agreements forbids it. On the other hand, it was the uncontradicted, unqualified testimony of all of the government witnesses questioned on the point that the closed-edge board was a superior product; that it was easier and less expensive to make and that the trade was not satisfied with the open-edge board and demanded the closed-edge board (FF. 5, R. 4134; Whittemore, R. 1398-1399, 1404; C. O. Brown, R. 993-994, 1223, 1236, 1242; G. M. Brown, R. 1446-1447, 1455-1456; Lenci, R. 2790, 2964-2965; Chism, R. 3479-3481, 3502-3503; Blagden, R. 874-875; Miller, R. 1379, 1385-1386; Griswold, R. 478, 575). This Court said in its opinion that the closed-edge board was superior in quality to open-edge board, as it was cheaper to produce, did not break so easily in shipment, and was less subject to crumbling at the edges when nailed in place (Slip op., p. 4).

Beaver, Universal, National and Niagara had desired the folded-edge board to the point of infringing United States Gypsum's patents to make it. Beaver (successor to Bestwall), after the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held the closed-edge board patent valid and infringed and the United States Supreme Court had denied certiorari, and after its efforts to make a modified edge had likewise been held an infringement, settled United States Gypsum's claim for infringement against it by paying substantial damages and taking a license to cover the closed-edge board so that it could continue its manufacture without further infringement (FF.

6; R. 4134-4135; Blagden, R. 874-875). Universal and National, with infringement suits pending against them, and Niagara, with a notice of infringement, then chose to settle United States Gypsum's claims against them by paying substantial damages and taking a license to cover the closed-edge board patent (FF. 7, 9; R. 4135-4137). Could it be expected that they would turn to the manufacture of the inferior open-edge board after they had acquired the legal right to make the closed-edge board which they had been making as infringers?

Atlantic never made any board until it took its license under United States Gypsum's patents in March 1927. It took the license so that it might be equipped to make and sell closed-edge board and avail itself of the most modern methods of manufacture in its new plant (FF. 7, 62; R. 4135, 4156). Having done this, would it be expected to change over its machines to make the inferior product which the trade did not want?

Of the licensees taking the first closed-edge board license, only Certain-teed, Ebsary and Texas make the open-edge board. The government called as its witnesses G. M. Brown, Whittemore, Nelson and C. O. Brown, none of whom had any connection with the gypsum industry at the time they testified, but all of whom were officers of Certain-teed at the time it took its closed-edge board license from United States Gypsum. When Certain-teed acquired the assets of Beaver in 1928, certain of its officers, particularly G. M. Brown, thought that the company could get by with open-edge board, but their testimony establishes beyond a shadow of doubt that they had learned from experience that Certain-teed was unable to compete with the closed-edge board and had accordingly settled its litigation with United States Gypsum, assumed Beaver's obligations under its closed-edge license, and taken a license of its own so that it might manufacture and sell the closed-edge board its trade was demanding (Whittemore, R. 1398-1399, 1403-1404; C. O. Brown, R. 1222-1223, 1236, 1242-1243; G. M. Brown, R. 1455-1456; Nelson, R. 1490-1491).

The government also called as its witnesses Lenci of Ebsary and Chism of Texas. It is equally clear that both Ebsary and Texas found that it was necessary for them to make the closed-edge board and considered it a business necessity to acquire the right to do so in order to meet the demands of their trade (Lenci, R. 2790-2792; Chism, R. 3479-3481). It is also undisputed that Texas manufactured and sold closed-edge board without any price control from August 6, 1929, until February 10, 1937, the date of the expiration of its original license (FF. 14, R. 4140).

Having determined to take licenses under these circumstances, can an inference of conspiracy to eliminate open-edge board possibly be drawn from the fact that Certainteed, Ebsary and Texas ceased making the wholly unsatisfactory product and produced the board covered by the license? Furthermore, having equipped their plants to produce closed-edge board, business men would not perpetrate the economic waste of making the closed-edge board and then trimming off the valuable closed-edge to produce the open-edge board.

The new licenses made in November 1929 combined the old inventions to the extent that the patents had not then expired with the bubble and starch inventions for convenience in one instrument. These licenses, which contained no price control based on the closed-edge invention, were taken for the express purpose of making the new improved bubble and starch board which required the combined use of the bubble invention, the starch patent and the valuable board machine patent. At this time the plants which already had been equipped to make the improved closed-edge board were further equipped to make the bubble and starch board, and as so fully equipped could not make board without using the board machine and the starch patents (Whittemore, R. 1399, 1412-1414). Under these circumstances, the licensees naturally would not commit the economic waste of producing an open-edge board; nor could there be any inference of an agreement to eliminate the production of open-edge board to support price control.

The Court refers to a provision in the license agreements that royalties should be paid on the sale of all board sold whether patented or unpatented as strongly indicative of an agreement not to manufacture unpatented board (Slip op., pp. 19, 31). The royalty provision in the license agreements is to pay royalty for the privilege of using the patents, some of which, both under the original licenses and the November 1929 licenses, had to be used to make a successful operation. In the original licenses the royalty was stated to be for the privilege of manufacturing and selling board using the machines and inventions covered by the patents and applications under which the license was granted. These consisted of some 67 patents and applications among which were the Utzman closed-edge patent and, as shown, the most important Utzman board machine patent (Complaint, par. 61, R. 14). No board could be made without the use of one or more of the principal patents in this group after the plant had been equipped to use these improvements (Whittemore, R. 1399; Lenci, R. 2792). The November 1929 licenses likewise contained a provision that royalties would be paid for the privilege of manufacturing and selling board using the machines and inventions covered by the patents and applications under which the license was granted. These consisted of some 57 patents and applications among which were the Utzman board machine patent, the starch patent and the bubble invention. When these licenses were made, no improved bubble and starch board could be made without the use first of the board machine patent and the starch patent and later these two patents and the bubble patent. Under these circumstances, it could hardly be said that the royalty provision in either group of licenses, simply for the privilege of using any or all of the patents, but which in practical operation required the use of some of the patents, was indicative of an agreement not to manufacture unpatented board. The evidence affirmatively shows that there was no agreement to discontinue the manufacture and sale of the open-edge board.

Furthermore, it should be borne in mind that the royalty provisions had their origin in the fact that the original licenses were largely made in settlement of damages for infringement and that United States Gypsum had insisted as part of the settlement that the licensee become obligated to pay royalty at least to the expiration date of the Utzman machine patent. Having had years of litigation to establish its patent rights in the face of wholesale infringement by other manufacturers, it is no wonder that United States Gypsum made certain that its licensees could not attempt to avoid payment of royalty on the pretense that the board was produced without the use of one or all of the patents under which the licenses were granted.

The "understanding" of certain witnesses that having acquired the licenses open-edge board would not be manufactured (Slip op., pp. 19, 31) was not an understanding in the sense of an agreement but merely an understanding in the sense of a realization of the business and economic factors hereinbefore stated. The testimony of these witnesses, taken as a whole, shows clearly that they were not speaking of an agreement to eliminate open-edge board, but rather of their understanding of the fact that no one having acquired the right to make the superior closed-edge board would think of making the inferior product.

There was never in the minds of the licensor or the licensees any thought of preventing the latter from making an open-edge board, for the simple reason that the improved methods, practical manufacture and economies, compelled the production of closed-edge board. The industry was required to do so not only because of the speed with which the board could be produced with resultant cost saving, but also because the public demanded the better board, just as gypsum plaster supplanted lime (Complaint, par. 23; R. 4), as the tungsten filament supplanted the carbon filament in electric lamps, as machines for producing materials in almost every industry supplanted hand made production of materials, and as the automobile supplanted the horse and buggy.

It follows that the Trial Court's findings, 54, 56, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 89 and 90, to the effect that there was no agreement to eliminate the production of open-edge board, were proper and should not be disturbed.

(b) Elimination of jobbers of patented board. This Court has rejected the Trial Court's findings 75-79 and 99-102 to the effect that the license agreements were not executed with the intent of eliminating jobbers, that the discontinuance of the jobbers' discount was an exercise by United States Gypsum of its right to establish a price for a patented product, and that complaints by licensees that other licensees had sold to jobbers at a discount did not establish concerted action to eliminate jobbers (Slip op., p. 31). This was done although the government assigned no error with respect to findings 76, 78 and 79 (Gov't. Brief, p. 160; R. 4178-4186).

It should be pointed out at the outset that findings 80 and 103 to the effect that the government failed to introduce any evidence that the defendants effectuated any restriction upon the distribution of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products through jobbers have not been rejected by this Court (FF. 80, 103; R. 4159, 4164-4165). The government did not even assign error as to finding 103 and concedes that plaster and gypsum products other than patented board are still sold through distributors and jobbers (Gov't. Brief, pp. 122, 160, 165; R. 4178-4186). The evidence referred to by the Court was that relating to patented board (Slip op., pp. 19-20, 32). The only question involved, then, is whether a patentee, in establishing a minimum price under licenses with price limitation, may establish the same price for the patented product to all classes of trade.

The government's underlying contention in respect of jobbers appears to be that United States Gypsum, in exercising its lawful right of price control over the patented product, failed to maintain a lower price for jobbers than for other classes of trade. As patentee, United States Gypsum could sell such board to the various classes of trade at any price it saw fit. That being so, how could the protection of its price by establishing the same price for its licensees be outside the scope of the patent monopoly which it had by reason of its patent ownership?

We believe that the evidence amply supports the Trial Court's findings that the jobbers' discount was not eliminated by United States Gypsum, except by the exercise of its right as patentee. Licensor expressly reserved the right to fix the minimum price at which any of the patented board was to be sold by the licensees, which right was at all times exercised by it according to licensor's own determination (Blagden, R. 876; Holland, R. 965-966; C. O. Brown, R. 1235; G. M. Brown, R. 1464-1465; Nelson, R. 1491; Whittemore, R. 1402-1403; Lenci, R. 2792, 2808, 2876, 2972, 2992, 3032, 3087-3088). There is no evidence that the bulletin of August 8, 1930, establishing the minimum price at which a licensee might sell its patented board to jobbers at the same level as the minimum price to the regular dealer trade, was anything other than United States Gypsum's independent exercise of the right reserved to it as licensor to fix the licensee's price on the patented board. There was no conflict in the testimony of the witnesses that there was no agreement or understanding whereby jobbers would be eliminated from the distribution system of patented board; nor was there any understanding or agreement with the licensees that the jobber discount would be discontinued or the price to jobbers made the same as the dealer price (Lenci, R. 2809-2810, 2876, 2995-2996, 3038-3040, 3077-3078; G. M. Brown, R. 1465; Black, R. 1358-1360).

The action of the patentee in eliminating the jobbers' discount on patented board could not result in an unlawful conspiracy among patentee and its licensees in violation of the Sherman Act, since the action is within the field of the patent monopoly granted by the patent law.

There was no showing, as stated in the opinion, that jobbers were eliminated for the purpose of preventing competition by uncontrolled resale prices (Slip op., p. 32), nor can such a purpose be inferred from the exercise of the right of the licensor to fix the minimum prices of its licensees to the jobbers. Assuming, arguendo, that the price as fixed had the effect of eliminating jobbers of patented board, it would have been a proper exercise of United States Gypsum's rights, as patentee, within the rule of the General Electric case, as expressly applied by this Court in that case.

In the General Electric case both jobbers and retailers were eliminated and this Court found nothing illegal in such elimination. Yet the General Electric plan of distribution, which was adopted by Westinghouse, was devised to enable General Electric "to deal directly with consumers and purchasers, and * * * to avoid selling the lamps owned by the company to jobbers or dealers, and prevent sale by these middle men to consumers at different and competing prices." (272 U. S. at 483). It was held also in that case that a requirement that the licensee must follow the same plan of distribution as that adopted by the licensor would have been lawful (272 U. S. at 489).

It follows that the Trial Court's findings 75-79 and 99-102 were proper and should not be disturbed.

(c) Stabilization of price of unpatented gypsum products. This Court has rejected the Trial Court's findings 73 and 94-97 to the effect that there was no agreement that prices would be raised or fixed upon plaster or any unpatented product, that the bulletin provision prohibiting rebates was designed to protect the price of patented board and was not used to tabilize the price of unpatented materials (Slip op., p. 33).

In holding these findings to be erroneous, we think the Court has misunderstood the defendants' position as to the licensor's right to protect the price on the patented product against indirect price cuttting, has misconstrued the evidence offered by the government in support of its charges that the prices of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products were concertedly raised, maintained and stabilized, and has failed to give full effect to the ruling in the General Electric case.

The defendants do not contend and never have contended that United States Gypsum, as licensor, had the right, in the exercise of its lawful price control over the patented product, to control the price of plaster or other unpatented products, whether or not sold in conjunction with the patented board (Slip op., p. 32). Their position is that, if recognition be accorded to the principle that a patentee may protect his own price on the patented product by granting to his competitors licenses with price limitation, as we have shown above the Court recognized in the General Electric case and in the Line Material case, then it must follow, in practical application of the rule, that he be permitted to protect his price on the patented product against indirect price cutting by his licensee. This proposition was fully recognized by this Court in the General Electric ruling. The provisions in the General Electric-Westinghouse license and in the licenses in the instant case in respect of indirect price cutting on patented products—i.e., the price protective provisions, including those which relate to reduction in the price of patented board by reducing the price of other products sold in conjunction therewith for the purpose and with the intent of reducing the price of the patented board below the minimum price therefor as fixed by the licensor—are of similar character (R. 3991).

In rejecting the Trial Court's findings on this point, the Court is likewise rejecting the unqualified, uncontradicted testimony of all of the witnesses in the case who were examined upon the subject that there was no agreement or understanding as to the prices to be charged for plaster and other miscellaneous gypsum products and who stated that they were free at all times to charge any price for plaster and any other unpatented product that they desired to charge (Griswold, R. 699-700; Blagden, R. 876; Holland, R. 966; C. O. Brown, R. 1231-1234, 1238; G. M. Brown, R. 1464-1465; Nelson, R. 1492; Whittemore, R. 1401-1402; Lenci, R. 2809, 2923, 2993-2995, 3075-3077; Black, R. 1365; Tomkins, R. 2010-2011, 2023, 2033, 2061; Chism, R. 3483).

Surely it should take unequivocal and convincing evidence to overcome the testimony of these witnesses, all of whom were called to the stand as government witnesses and most of whom had ceased to have any connection with the industry long prior to their appearance on the stand.

This Court states that the government cited letters written by officers of the corporate defendants showing they anticipated that price stabilization of patented board would be accompanied with stabilization of gypsum products and refers to the Trial Court's finding that the price of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products in fact did increase after 1929 (Slip op., p. 20). This evidence showed no intent or purpose of an illegal conspiracy to fix the price of unpatented products. It amounted to nothing more than an awareness on the part of some in the industry that a settlement of the litigation, and elimination of the bitterness engendered thereby, would normally lead to better conditions in the industry generally. In giving significance to the fact that the price of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products did increase after 1929, this Court apparently has overlooked the fact that in 1927 and 1928 there was an intense price war in the industry wherein prices of plaster had reached a level which could not be maintained if most of the companies were to survive (FF. 60, 94, R. 4155, 4162; Holland R. 902, 966; Black, R. 1329-1330; Stromquist, R. 3573. See also R. 6398, 6410, 6414).

This Court refers to the license bulletin forbidding rebates and allowances on patented board as stating that a sale of board at posted prices would be in violation of the licenses if the licensee reduced the price of other products (Slip op., pp. 20-21).

It is clear from the provision of the bulletin itself (R. 5092-5093) and uncontradicted in the testimony of witnesses that this bulletin was not intended or understood to be an attempt to control the licensee's price of unpatented products, but was merely to prevent a reduction of the actual price charged for the patented board through the means of giving away other products or selling them in combination with patented board at a fake or false price therefor for the purpose and with the effect of giving a rebate to the purchaser on the patented board (Tomkins, R. 2023; Lenci, R. 2922-2923, 2993-2995, 3052-3053). In other words, although the licensee might sell its plaster and other unpatented products at any price it saw fit, or give them away, United States Gypsum, as licensor, had a legitimate interest in protecting the price of patented board when the licensee, in a sale of patented board, makes a deal with the buyer to cut the price on other products solely for the purpose and with the effect of reducing the price actually received by it for the patented board below the minimum price established by the licensor.

The Court refers to complaints of licensees made to Board Survey as to their competitors' failure to maintain prevailing prices on plaster (Slip op., p. 20). But an examination of the full correspondence with Board Survey will show that it had to do only with charges that a licensee was selling its patented board in violation of the minimum price therefor established by the licensor and that the licensor, through Board Survey, was merely enforcing the rebate provision of the bulletin within the meaning set forth above.

It follows that the Trial Court's findings 73 and 94-97 were proper and should not be disturbed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, and on the foregoing grounds, it is respectfully urged that this petition for a rehearing be granted.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 13.—October Term, 1947.

The United States of America, Appellant, v. United States Gypsum Company et al.	On Appeal From the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

[March 8, 1948.]

Mr. Justice Reed delivered the opinion of the Court.

The United States instituted this suit on August 15, 1940, in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia against United States Gypsum Company, five other corporate defendants, and seven individual defendants, as a civil proceeding under the Sherman Act. The complaint charged that the appellees had violated both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by conspiring to fix prices on patented gypsum board and unpatented gypsum products, to standardize gypsum board and its method of production for the purpose of eliminating competition, and to regulate the distribution of gypsum board by eliminating jobbers and fixing resale prices of manufacturing distributors.

The Attorney General filed an expediting certificate on December 16, 1941, and on September 17, 1942, a three-judge court was constituted to hear the case. By amendment to the complaint the government charged that the article claims of five patents, owned by United States Gypsum were invalid and void. The appellees moved to strike the amendment to the complaint or in the alternative for partial judgment dismissing the amendment. On November 15, 1943, the court granted appellees' motion for partial judgment on the ground that the government had no standing to attack the validity of the patents in an antitrust proceeding. The case thereupon went to trial and upon conclusion of the government's case on April 20, 1944, the appellees moved to dismiss the complaint under Rule 41 (b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure upon the ground that on the facts and the law the Government had shown no right to relief. On June 15, 1946, the court filed an opinion holding that the motion should be granted, and on August 5, 1946, the court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered judgment dismissing the complaint. The government appealed directly to this Court, 32 Stat. 823, and probable jurisdiction was noted on December 16, 1946. — U. S. —. The decisions below are reported as United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 53 F. Supp. 889 and 67 F. Supp. 397. United States v. Line Material Co., decided today, will be of value to the reader in considering this opinion.

I.

The appellees are engaged in the production of gypsum and the manufacture of gypsum products, including gypsum plasterboard, gypsum lath, gypsum wallboard, and gypsum plaster. At the time of the alleged conspiracy, appellees sold nearly all of the first three products which were marketed in states east of the Rocky Mountains, and a substantial portion of the plaster sold in the same area. Gypsum products are widely used in the construction industry. In 1939, the sales value of gypsum products was approximately $42,000,000, of which $23,000,000 was accounted for by gypsum board (plasterboard, lath, and wallboard), $17,000,000 by gypsum plaster and the remainder by gypsum block and tile and other products. Over 90% of all plaster used in building construction in the United States is made with gypsum.

Gypsum is found in numerous deposits throughout the country. Gypsum board is made by taking the crushed and calcined mineral, adding water, and spreading the gypsum slurry between two paper liners. When the gypsum hardens, the mineral adheres to the paper and the resulting product is used in construction. Plasterboard and lath have a rough surface and are used as a wall and ceiling base for plaster; wallboard has a finished surface and does not require the addition of plaster.

Since its organization in 1901, United States Gypsum has been the dominant concern in the gypsum industry. In 1939, it sold 35% of all gypsum board in the eastern area. By development and purchase it has acquired the most significant patents covering the manufacture of gypsum board, and beginning in 1926, United States Gypsum offered licenses under its patents to other concerns in the industry, all licenses containing a provision that United States Gypsum should fix the minimum price at which the licensee sold gypsum products embodying the patents. Since 1929, United States Gypsum has fixed prices at which the other defendants have sold gypsum board.

The other corporate appellees are National Gypsum Co., Certain-teed Products Corp., Celotex Corp., Ebsary Gypsum Co., and Newark Plaster Co. Appellee Gloyd is the owner of an unincorporated business trading under the name of Texas Cement Plaster Co. National produced 23% of all gypsum board sold in the eastern area in 1939, Certain-teed 11%, and the other four companies correspondingly smaller amounts. Seven companies which were active when the licensing plan was evolved in 1929 and before have been acquired by other companies, and defendant Celotex entered the industry in 1939 when the licensing plan was fully in effect by acquiring the assets and licenses of American Gypsum Company. The seven individual defendants are presidents of the corporate defendants. The tabulation in the margin lists the corporate and individual defendants, and shows the corporate changes which have taken place.[1]

Prior to 1912, gypsum board was manufactured with an open edge, leaving the gypsum core exposed on all four sides. In 1912, United States Gypsum received as assignee a patent issued to one Utzman, No. 1,034,746, covering both process and product claims on board with closed side edges, the lower paper liner being folded over the exposed gypsum core. Closed-edge board was superior in quality to open-edge board, as it was cheaper to produce, did not break so easily in shipment, and was less subject to crumbling at the edges when nailed in place. United States Gypsum also acquired a number of other patents relating to the process of making closed-edge board. In 1917, United States Gypsum sued a competitor claiming infringement of the Utzman patent and in 1921 the Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed a judgment holding that the Utzman patent was valid and infringed.[2] United States Gypsum settled with an infringer, Beaver Products Co., in 1926, by granting Beaver a license to practice the closed-edge board patent with a provision that United States Gypsum should fix the price at which Beaver sold patented board. Shortly before the settlement with Beaver, United States Gypsum instituted suits against American Gypsum Co., Universal Gypsum and Lime Co., and gave notice of infringement to Niagara Gypsum Co. Universal did not contest the suit but accepted a license with price fixing provisions, and two other small companies followed suit in 1927. American and Niagara would not settle, and in 1928 judgment was entered against American holding that American's partially closed-edge board infringed one of United States Gypsum's patents. United States Gypsum also instituted suits for infringement against National Gypsum Co.

in 1926 and 1928 which were settled by the execution of a license and payment of damages as part of the industry-wide settlement with all other defendants in 1929. In that year, two sets of license agreements were signed in which United States Gypsum licensed all but two companies manufacturing gypsum board in substantially identical terms and from that date United States Gypsum has maintained rigid control over the price and terms of sale of virtually all gypsum board. Since 1937 the control has been complete.

Up to this point there is no dispute as to the facts. The government charged that the defendants acted in concert in entering into the licensing agreements, that United States Gypsum granted licenses and the other defendants accepted licenses with the knowledge that all other concerns in the industry would accept similar licenses, and that as a result of such concert of action, competition was eliminated by fixing the price of patented board, eliminating the production of unpatented board, and regulating the distribution of patented board. To support its allegations, the government introduced in evidence the license agreements, more than 600 documentary exhibits consisting of letters and memoranda written by officers of the corporate defendants, and examined 28 witnesses, most of whom were officers of the corporate defendants. Since the appellees' motion to dismiss when the government had finished its case was sustained, the appellees introduced no evidence. They did cross-examine the government's witnesses. The documentary exhibits present a full picture of the circumstances surrounding the negotiation of the patent license agreements, and are chiefly relied on by the government to prove its case.

Although the industry-wide network of patent licenses was not achieved until 1929, the government claims that the documentary exhibits show that the process of formulation of the plan began in 1925. On December 12,

1925, Augustus S. Blagden, president of Beaver, sent a memorandum to Sewell Avery, president of United States Gypsum. Beaver had been adjudged an infringer of the Utzman patent, and Blagden and Avery had negotiated terms for settling the suit. Blagden testified that Avery had offered to settle with Beaver by granting Beaver a license with a price-fixing limitation and provision that Beaver should pay damages for past infringement and acknowledge the validity of United States Gypsum's patents. In the memorandum Blagden analyzed in detail the consequences that would flow from five possible decisions of the Circuit Court of Appeals if the decree adjudging Beaver an infringer were appealed. Blagden noted that whether the court upheld or denied United States Gypsum's claim, United States Gypsum "would lose, perhaps irrevocably, its present opportunity to organize the industry and stabilize prices." The memorandum further pointed out that if the suit were settled on the terms offered by Avery, the result would be more favorable to United States Gypsum than any possible decision by the Court of Appeals. Beaver would accept a license and "would agree to use its best endeavors" to induce other manufacturers to accept similar licenses; if Beaver were successful in persuading other manufacturers to execute licenses, United States Gypsum could "maintain a lawful price control and avoid the necessity of a reduction by plaintiff [United States Gypsum] of current prices to meet competition." Under such circumstances, United States Gypsum "would be able to take a dominating position in the industry with an opportunity to control or at least to participate in the control of prices through legitimate means of patent licenses."

Although there is no proof that Avery approved Blagden's memorandum, Blagden did accept a license on the terms offered by Avery in July, 1926, and Blagden testified that he talked to a number of representatives from other companies and urged them to accept licenses from United States Gypsum. Frank J. Griswold, general manager of American Gypsum Company, also was active in promoting a scheme of industry-wide licensing. On May 12, 1926, Griswold wrote a letter to the president of American, stating that he had talked to Blagden, and added that "This matter will be discussed by all independent wallboard manufacturers at a meeting in Chicago next Wednesday afternoon." Griswold concluded the letter with the statement: "According to the plans we have we figure that there is a possibility of us holding the price steady on wallboard for the next fourteen or fifteen years which means much to the industry."

Blagden and Griswold did not succeed in persuading other manufacturers to accept licenses in 1926. Universal accepted a license in September, 1926, but there is no evidence that Blagden and Griswold played any part in negotiating the settlement. Griswold suggested to Avery that United States Gypsum offer a shorter term license, but Avery was unwilling to make such a concession. During 1927 Griswold and Blagden continued their negotiations. Griswold and Samuel M. Gloyd, owner of the Texas Cement Plaster Co., corresponded with each other in regard to the licensing proposal. When Griswold informed Gloyd that Atlantic Gypsum Co. had signed a long-term license with United States Gypsum, Gloyd replied that he would apply for a license right away. Previously Gloyd had been trying to secure a shorter term license. Gloyd and Atlantic both signed licenses similar to the original license granted to Beaver.

In January 1928 Certain-teed Products Corp. purchased the assets of Beaver. Certain-teed had previously been making open-edge board and selling it at lower prices than the closed-edge board manufactured by United States Gypsum and its licensees. Certain-teed refused to accept the license agreement of Beaver and United States Gypsum filed suit to compel Certain-teed to accept the license. Certain-teed posted a million dollar bond and commenced to make open-edge board at all Beaver plants. George M. Brown, president of Certain-teed, and Avery had several conferences at which they attempted to compose their differences, but without result. The government introduced in evidence a memorandum written by Brown, dated March 1, 1928, in which Brown expressed confidence that he could make open-edge board and sell it in competition with United States Gypsum, and that he was afraid to sign up a license with price-fixing provisions because his competitors would grant secret rebates. Brown concluded that Certain-teed should answer the suit of United States Gypsum to enforce the Beaver license by claiming that the suit was filed not in the interest of royalties but for the sole purpose of trade domination and monopoly and price control. Brown concluded with the statement that United States Gypsum's "determination to gather in a monopoly, if possible, leads them to risk everything for such domination because of the big rewards possible, if they can succeed." Certain-teed did file an answer to the suit couched in those terms. Griswold testified that in a conversation with Brown in the following month Brown stated that he might possibly consider taking out a license if "all of the other manufacturers, or certain ones of them" took out a license. Griswold also wrote the president of American that he had had a conference with Brown at which Brown had said that "they were willing at that time to enter into a license agreement without any particular changes in it providing all of the manufacturers, including Ebsary, would enter into it and make it one hundred per cent."

No settlement was reached between United States Gypsum and Certain-teed in 1928, and no other license agreements were signed. A meeting of representatives of the principal non-licensee manufacturers took place in October, and in November the board of directors of National adopted a resolution authorizing the officials of the company to enter into a license agreement. Besides Certain-teed and National, American, Ebsary, Niagara, and Kelley Plasterboard Company manufactured gypsum board but did not hold licenses from United States Gypsum.

The patent licenses in force at the beginning of 1929 provided that United States Gypsum could fix prices only during the term of the principal Utzman patent, which was scheduled to expire on August 6, 1929, although the remaining features of the agreements were to remain in force until the expiration of the last patent included under the license, which was in 1937. In negotiations in 1929, various defendants expressed concern over the possibility of an effective plan of price fixing in view of the imminent expiration of the Utzman patent. In a letter dated January 9, J. F. Haggerty, president of National, wrote Eugene Holland, president of Universal, asking his views as to possibility of continuing price control after the expiration of the Utzman patent. Holland in reply wrote as follows:

> "You will remember that Mr. Avery made it very clear to us that if this plan could not be worked out on the Utzman patent that there were other patents available and we were all agreed that the fact that the Utzman patent expires next August is not a practical reason for continuing the conflict."

Holland also stated: "I am quite sure that Mr. Avery would not be interested in negotiating settlements unless everyone involved was included." In point of fact, Holland's interpretation of Avery's views was incorrect; several months later licenses were granted to four unlicensed manufacturers but not to American or Kelley. Other exhibits suggest that the prospective licensees were interested in accepting licenses at the same time. In his letter of January 9, Haggerty wrote as follows:

> "The question now in my mind is whether or not the other four board makers, who are outside the license agreement, feel that it would be advantageous to go in without the American Gypsum Company. It would seem to me that the chief value in a meeting would be to discuss that point."

On May 14, 1929, the board of directors of National held a meeting "for the purpose of discussing the license agreement submitted to all the manufacturers of gypsum products in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains by the United States Gypsum Co." The minutes of the meeting further quoted the chairman as saying that "he had been definitely informed that all other manufacturers of gypsum products east of the Rocky Mountains, except the American Gypsum Company, had agreed to sign the license contract in substantially the form as submitted to this Board." The board of directors authorized the execution of the proposed license contract.

Two days later National signed the license agreement. On the following day National sent a telegram to Avery as follows:

> "Our contract signed and in mail Reeb [of Niagara] ready Stop We are working with Ebsary with hope of everybody being set by Saturday to justify your calling meeting all board makers Monday if you like."

On May 18 Avery dispatched identical telegrams to United States Gypsum's licensees, and to Certain-teed and Ebsary, as follows:

> "Mr. Kling [of American] has sent in a contract with material changes and declares he will not attend meeting unless these changes are accepted by us Stop

> We cannot accept them and regret that the Tuesday meeting will be futile unless other companies wish to proceed as outlined without American license."

On May 20 Avery wrote Gloyd of Texas Cement Plaster, a licensee since 1927, stating that although American was unwilling to accept a license, officers of Certain-teed, Niagara, Ebsary, and National had expressed themselves favorably "to this adjustment" and "it is not improbable that the matter may be closed at the meeting tomorrow or soon thereafter."

On the following day, a meeting of representatives of all but one of the licensed manufacturers, and all unlicensed manufacturers except American and Kelley, took place in Chicago. The three unlicensed manufacturers who were present—Certain-teed, Ebsary and Niagara—signed license agreements.

At the same meeting, Avery explained to the licensees that United States Gypsum had acquired applications for a patent covering so-called "bubble board" and suggested that the licensees take out licenses under these applications. The applications covered a process for making gypsum board by introducing a soap foam in the gypsum slurry which would result in a lighter and cheaper board. Avery subsequently mailed proposed license agreements under the "bubble board" applications to the licensees. George M. Brown of Certain-teed on June 4th acknowledged receipt of the license proposal in a non-committal reply, but composed a memorandum for his own files in which he commented that the savings resulting from taking a license would be doubtful, and then added:

> "They would have a price control of our business, which might be to our advantage and might be to our disadvantage in future. They should be just as anxious to have us use this as we should be to get it if there are to be the benefits that they anticipate in stabilizing the whole industry by making a uniform product and get away from the fierce warfares between different products like we have recently had. The saving is too slight to cause us very great worry even if never permitted to use it and the door will certainly be open later for its use if it has the merit that they believe it has. Under a contract sufficiently liberal, we should proceed at once."

On June 6th the licensees met again in Chicago to discuss the question of accepting a license under the "bubble board" patents. Shortly thereafter Certain-teed agreed to take out a license. National also agreed to accept a license; the minutes of the meeting of the board of directors on July 23 read in part as follows:

"The President stated that the United States Gypsum Company has been working on a plan to stabilize the Gypsum Industry and has offered to license the entire Industry under the new method of manufacturing gypsum wallboard known as the 'Bubble System.' The license agreements submitted to each of the wallboard manufacturers contain price fixing clauses and under the agreements submitted the prices of wallboard would be fixed for the whole industry for the term of approximately seventeen years."

The board passed a resolution authorizing the executive committee to negotiate a license agreement, "provided that the United States Gypsum Company, by virtue of this agreement with this Corporation and with other manufacturers of gypsum wallboard, shall control the price of wallboard sold in the United States and its possessions."

Two days later another conference of licensees was held in Chicago. C. O. Brown, vice-president of Certain-teed, prepared a memorandum for George M. Brown, president of Certain-teed, describing what happened at that meeting. According to the memorandum, National and Universal were unwilling to accept "bubble board" licenses until they had settled their litigation over National's infringement of Universal's starch patent. That patent included process and product claims on wallboard made with starch. Brown noted that United States Gypsum was working on a proposal to combine the starch and "bubble board" processes; although such a combination would have technological advantages, Brown commented on the fact that the starch patent had already been issued "so a combination of the two systems would give a patent to work under in the manufacture and sale of Gypsum Wallboard immediately, whereas under only the Bubble process there would be an interim between August 6th and the date of issuance of the Bubble Patent where there would be no Patent control. There is, of course, considerable benefit to having Patent control continue without a break." Brown further noted that Avery was trying to work out a proposition with Holland to buy the starch patent or to license the industry under both processes.

Another meeting of licensees was held in Chicago on August 6, the day on which the Utzman patent expired. In a memorandum summarizing what happened at the meeting, C. O. Brown said that it had been agreed that Universal would assign the starch patent to United States Gypsum, and the latter company would issue a single license contract covering all patents and patent applications. Brown further reported that "All of the Independent Gypsum Companies are willing to sign on this basis" and that "The Attorneys feel that such a contract would be exceptionally strong and price control could be maintained for the life of the Contract without difficulty." On August 27 the board of directors of National held a meeting at which the president was authorized to sign a license with United States Gypsum covering the "bubble board" and starch patents "provided that all the present licensees of the United States Gypsum Company enter into a similar license and provided further that in the judgment of the President such action will result in legal stabilization of the markets."

Soon thereafter, National, Certain-teed, Ebsary, Niagara and Atlantic executed licenses with United States Gypsum, to become effective on the date when Universal's receiver transferred the starch patents to United States Gypsum. On November 5 the starch patents were assigned to United States Gypsum, and on the same date Universal also accepted a license. On November 25 American settled its litigation with United States Gypsum and accepted a license. All manufacturers of gypsum board were now licensed by United States Gypsum, except Kelley Plasterboard Co., and that concern executed a license in April of the following year. Texas Cement Plaster, a licensee under the Utzman patent, did not accept a license under the starch and "bubble board" patents until 1937 when the original license expired. Texas was thus free to sell board at any price from 1929 to 1937.

The contracts which became effective in November 1929 were in substantially identical terms. The license with Universal contained preferential royalty terms which were granted as consideration for the transfer of the starch patents; every other license (except that of Texas) provided that if the licensor should subsequently grant more favorable terms to any licensee (except Universal), the same more favorable terms would be granted to the first licensee. Each licensee agreed to pay as royalty a stipulated percentage on the selling price of "all plasterboard and gypsum wallboard of every kind" whether or not made by patented processes or embodying product claims.

The contract covered fifty patents and seven patent applications, including the starch patent and the "bubble board" applications; the contract was to run until the most junior patent expired. As two "bubble board" patents were issued in 1937, the licenses ran until 1954. The licensees agreed not to sell patented wallboard to manufacturing distributors unless United States Gypsum gave its consent as to each prospective purchaser. As in the previous contracts, United States Gypsum reserved the right to fix the minimum price at which each licensee sold wallboard embodying the licensor's patents, the licensor agreeing that such minimum price would be not greater than the price at which the licensor itself offered to sell. The more important provisions of the license to this litigation are set forth in an appendix to this opinion. Nothing has been omitted that appears to be significant on the issues considered.

In 1934 and 1935 United States Gypsum offered supplemental licenses to practice a patent covering metallized board, which was accepted by almost all licensees, and in 1936 United States Gypsum offered licenses under its perforated lath patent which were also accepted by most licensees. These supplemental licenses contained provisions allowing United States Gypsum to fix the minimum price on board made according to the patents which were licensed.

The government charged that the execution of the license agreements in May and November 1929 marked a turning point in the gypsum industry. The government introduced evidence tending to show that the price of first quality wallboard was raised, that United States Gypsum standardized the type of board sold by requiring its licensees to sell No. 2 wallboard and seconds at the same price as standard wallboard, and standardized the methods of sale so that no licensee could offer more favorable terms to a customer than any other licensee.

Although the license contracts gave the licensor the right only to fix the minimum price at which the licensee should sell, United States Gypsum issued a series of bulletins which defined in minute detail both the prices and terms of sale for patented gypsum board. They are printed on nearly a thousand pages of the record. The bulletins adopted a basing point system of pricing, according to which each licensee was required to quote a price determined by taking the mill price at the nearest basing point and adding the all rail freight from the basing point to the destination. The freight was to be computed on specified uniform billing weights, in order to prevent variations in freight arising from the differences in weight of board made by different manufacturers, and each licensee was directed to charge exactly the same switching, cartage, and extra delivery charges. Specified board sizes and minimum quantities were prescribed, licensees were forbidden to employ commission salesmen without the written consent of the licensor, regulations were prescribed as to the size, quantity and markings of gypsum board used for packing shipments, granting of long term credit was prohibited, sales on consignment were enjoined and licensees were forbidden to deliver board directly to a building site.

It is not practicable to quote one of the hundreds of comprehensive bulletins on prices and terms. The industry accepted directions for distribution of product as corollary to price control, so that prices would not be infringed by variations of seller contracts. The detail of directives is well illustrated by the directive for computation of freight to be added to the mill price and the provision against subtle price reduction. The excerpts below are from the Board License Bulletin of June 10, 1939.[1]

[1] "In computing the delivered minimum price hereunder, rail freight, wherever mentioned in this bulletin shall mean rail freight in accordance with rail rates published in regular freight tariffs, using the

In order to insure compliance with the price bulletins, United States Gypsum established a wholly owned subsidiary in 1932 named Board Survey, Inc. Licensees were invited to send in complaints as to violations of pricing bulletins to Board Survey and that organization forwarded the complaints to the alleged delinquent licensees. Board Survey was authorized to make a thorough check-up of all reported violations and to take such action as it might deem necessary or proper to protect United States Gypsum's rights under the license agreements and patents. Although the record discloses no instance in which Board Survey took or even threatened to take legal action against any licensee, there are many instances in which Board Survey sent letters to licensees requesting an explanation as to alleged violations. Meetings of licensees were held at which doubtful provisions of the price bulletins were explained. The trial court found that "in the main" licensees complied with the bulletin conditions.

The government further charged that the defendants had discontinued the production of unpatented open-edge board, eliminated jobbers by requiring jobbers to purchase board at the same price as board sold to dealers, induced manufacturing distributors to observe bulletin prices upon resale of board purchased from licensees, and stabilized the price of gypsum plaster and other unpatented products.

"Rebates, allowances, etc.:

"Any sale of patented products, though ostensibly made at or above the minimum price established by licensor, will nevertheless be considered a violation of the provisions of the license if licensee directly or indirectly reduces the actual price charged by licensee below such minimum price by granting the customer rebates, unearned or unwarranted refunds, credits or discounts, by reducing the price of other products, by hiring customers' trucks, by granting allowances for advertising or other purposes, by splitting of salesmen's compensation or commissions with customers, by overshipment of patented products, by including board under the guise of dunnage, or by making any other payment or allowance in the form of money or otherwise which has for its purpose and effect reducing the price charged by licensee below such minimum price."

It is undisputed that after 1929 the defendants ceased to manufacture open-edge board; the government claims that production of the unpatented board was discontinued in order to protect the patented board from competition. Prior to 1929 open-edge board had sold at lower prices than closed-edge board, and the government's exhibits show that the officers of the corporate defendants realized that there could be no effective stabilization of prices on closed-edge board as long as open-edge board was sold without price control. The license agreements provided that royalties should be paid on the sales of all board sold, patented or unpatented, a provision which would tend to discourage the production of higher cost unpatented board. Although the government produced no evidence of any agreement between the defendants to eliminate production of open-edge board, corporate officers of the licensees testified that they anticipated that one result of industry-wide licensing would be the elimination of open-edge board.

The May 1929 licenses required licensees to obtain the consent of the licensor before selling board to manufacturing distributors or to jobbers and a price bulletin issued under those licenses allowed licensees to grant a 10% discount to both classes. The November 1929 licenses, however, eliminated the consent requirement with respect to jobbers, although it was retained with respect to manufacturing distributors.

The jobbers' discount was continued in bulletins issued under the later licenses until August 8, 1930, when United States Gypsum ordered that the discount be eliminated. Although jobbers could still buy board if they so desired, jobbers could remain in business only by selling to dealers at an advance over the bulletin prices. The court below found that some jobbers were able to remain in business by selling board in odd lots to dealers who did not wish to buy the minimum lot required in the price bulletins. The government points to the definition of "jobber" in the license agreements as "those who do not manufacture but buy and sell plasterboard or gypsum wallboard in straight cars or in mixed cars with other building material and who do not sell at retail," and points to uncontradicted testimony that jobbers as so defined were eliminated.

We do not stop to set forth the evidence upon which the government relied to support its charge that the defendants fixed prices at which manufacturing distributors sold gypsum board which they had purchased from United States Gypsum or its licensees, as that issue is not necessary for a decision of the case. To support the charge of stabilizing the price of unpatented plaster, the government cited letters written by officers of the corporate defendants showing that they anticipated that price stabilization in patented board would be accompanied with stabilization of all gypsum products. The trial court found that the price of plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products in fact did increase after 1929. The government charged that plaster prices were stabilized by requiring licensees who sold plaster together with patented board to sell plaster at prevailing prices. Board and plaster were usually sold together and the defendants claim that cutting of prices on plaster, in sales of the two together, operated in effect as a rebate on the price of board, and hence was legally subject to control. The government introduced in evidence a large number of complaints to Board Survey by licensees as to their competitors' failure to maintain prevailing prices on plaster. A bulletin provision forbidding rebates and allowances stated that a sale of board at posted prices would be in violation of the license if the licensee reduced the price of other products, and Board Survey in summarizing violations of bulletin terms revealed through audit of the licensees' books listed "Price concessions on other material in connection with board sales."

II.

Appellees admit that in the absence of whatever protection is afforded by valid patents the licensing arrangements described would be in violation of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the government sought to amend its complaint to allege that the "bubble board" patents were not valid. The trial court held that the government was estopped to attack the validity of the patents in the present proceeding, on the ground that such attack would constitute a review of action by the Commissioner of Patents which was not authorized by statute.[4] The trial court thought that the issue was controlled by United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224, in which the United States was held without standing to bring a suit in equity to cancel a patent on the ground of invalidity.

While this issue need not be decided to dispose of this case, it seems inadvisable to leave the decision as a precedent. Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, 240. We cannot agree with the conclusion of the trial court. The United States does not claim that the patents are invalid because they have been employed in violation of the Sherman Act and that a decree should issue canceling the patents; rather the government charges that the defendants have violated the Sherman Act because they granted licenses under patents which in fact were invalid. If the government were to succeed in showing that the patents were in fact invalid, such a finding would not in itself result in a judgment for cancellation of the patents.[5]

In an antitrust suit instituted by a licensee against his licensor we have repeatedly held that the licensee may attack the validity of the patent under which he was licensed, because of the public interest in free competition, even though the licensee has agreed in his license not to do so. Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173; Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394; MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402. In a suit to vindicate the public interest by enjoining violations of the Sherman Act, the United States should have the same opportunity to show that the asserted shield of patentability does not exist. Of course, this appeal must be considered on a record that assumes the validity of all the patents involved.

III.

The trial court ruled that on motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 41 (b), the court should weigh the evidence and grant the motion if the government failed to establish its case by a preponderance of the evidence, and the court further ruled that the government had the burden of proving both the charge of conspiracy and the charge that the licensing agreements were not within the protection of the patent grant.[6] We do not stop to consider those rulings. They are not of importance in this case as we think the preponderance of evidence at the conclusion of the government's case indicated a violation of the Sherman Act.

We are unable to accept, however, the ruling of the court that declarations of each defendant were admissible only against the defendant making the declaration.[7] A consideration of that point really involves the heart of the case since the treatment of the declarations may vitally affect the outcome. Some may have doubts as to whether the agreements and bulletins alone are sufficient to establish a conspiracy but the admission of the separate declarations against all greatly strengthens the government's position. We think that the industry-wide license agreements, entered into with knowledge on the part of licensor and licensees of the adherence of others, with the control over prices and methods of distribution through the agreements and the bulletins, were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy. Each licensee, as is shown by the uncontradicted references to the meetings and discussion that were preliminary to the execution of the licenses could not have failed to be aware of the intention of United States Gypsum and the other licensees to make the arrangements for licenses industry wide. The license agreements themselves, on their face, showed this purpose. The licensor was to fix minimum prices binding both on itself and its licensees; the royalty was to be measured by a percentage of the value of all gypsum products, patented or unpatented; the license could not be transferred without the licensor's consent; the licensee opened its books of accounts to the licensor; the licensee was protected against competition with more favorable licenses and there was a cancellation clause for failure to live up to the arrangements. See the Appendix. Furthermore, the bulletins gave directions to the industry as to its prices and methods of operation in unmistakable terms. The District Court did not accept the foregoing facts as definite evidence of a conspiracy. To us, these facts are proof of a conspiracy. Certainly they are overwhelming evidence of a plan of the licensors and licensees to fix prices and regulate operations in the gypsum board industry.

[5] Compare Becher v. Contoure Laboratories, 279 U. S. 388.

[6] 67 F. Supp. 397, 417, 441.

If the District Court had thought that a plan such as is evidenced by the license agreements and the bulletins was illegal under the Sherman Act, it might have had a different conclusion on the question of the admissibility of the declarations of some appellees against all. Its position stemmed logically from its understanding of United States v. General Electric Co., 276 U. S. 476.[8]

[8] To the District Court the General Electric case establishes "that a patent license agreement granting the right to make, use and vend a patented product, under terms and conditions, including prices, fixed by the licensor, is lawful. Such a license agreement ordinarily, and, when the prices are (as in the General Electric case) a part of the license contract, necessarily, involves negotiation and discussion between the licensor and the licensee and agreement upon the terms and conditions, a purpose to execute and carry out the agreement, combined action in signing the agreement and in performing the obligations thereof, with knowledge that it will result in a stabilized and presumably profitable price for the patented product as between the parties and in the industry (since the parties are, by virtue of the patent, the only ones having a right to make, use and sell the superior patented product) and with knowledge that it will result in a monopoly (i. e., a divided patent monopoly), in probable discontinuance of manufacture and sale by the licensee of inferior materials (the licensee's incentive to take a license is the right to make the superior product), and in control of distribution. What a lawful patent license agreement normally involves cannot be unlawful. Additionally, since a patent owner may lawfully divide his patent monopoly with a plurality of licensees, there will in the usual course be with each of such licensees the same negotiation and discussion, agreement upon terms, purpose to execute and carry out a license contract and to accomplish its normal results, and combined action in so doing, as in the case of a single licensee. And each licensee will be informed of and discuss with the licensor the terms and conditions of the proposed licenses; otherwise no more than a single license could be executed. A patent owner would not be able to license competing manufacturers upon different price terms; no

The opinions in No. 8, United States v. Line Material Co., decided today, whatever may be the different views expressed, make clear that the District Court's interpretation of General Electric differs from that of this Court. With its interpretation of the rule of General Electric, the District Court was not required to balance the privileges of United States Gypsum and its licensees under the patent grants with the prohibitions of the Sherman Act against combinations and attempts to monopolize. Conspiracies to control prices and distribution, such as we have here, we believe to be beyond any patent privilege.

Under its view of the General Electric case, the District Court concluded that only a lack of good faith by defendants in the execution of what that court considered legitimate exploitation of the patents could justify in this case one such would be willing to suffer competitive disadvantages; no one such would be willing to sign in the dark as to the terms to be extended to the others; ordinarily, moreover, there will be discussion at large, i. e., within the trade, of the advantages and disadvantages of the licenses proposed by the patent owner. Each of a plurality of licensees will, moreover, have the same purpose to take a license and to secure its resulting advantages. The licensor and each licensee of such a plurality constitute a 'combination' to effectuate the purposes of their license. Since a plurality of licenses is lawful, all of this must be lawful. Further, if in practical effect the licensor and the plurality of licensees are a 'combination' to the same end, such a 'combination' is not stigmatized by the law—provided in purpose and effect it does not secure to the patent owner more than the normal reward of a patent monopoly, nor to any of the licensees with whom that monopoly is divided more than the advantages which naturally result to a licensee, as well as to a licensor, from patent licensing. All of this necessarily follows from the General Electric case." 67 F. Supp. at 439–40.

Referring to the evidence above, the District Court said, id., p. 457: "These items do not prove the conspiracy charged because they do not show that the licenses were not bona fide or that they were executed to accomplish restraints outside the proper limits of a patent monopoly."

a determination adverse to the defendants.[9] The trial court held that an association of defendants in a common plan to organize the gypsum industry and stabilize prices through a network of patent licenses was legally permissible, and that in any event the government failed to prove that the defendants had associated themselves in such a plan. The trial court further found that the license agreements were entered into in good faith, in reliance upon United States v. General Electric, supra, and Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and were intended to bind the parties to the promises made; that the explicit terms in the licenses were within the scope of the patent grant, and that the government had failed to prove any agreement among the defendants to take

"But in view of the importance of this case and the consequent probability that it will reach a higher tribunal, we think it desirable also to state our views as to the meaning of the evidence when the declarations are considered as binding not merely upon the declarant but also upon all of the alleged co-conspirators. We have considered the evidence in this light, and we think the Government still has not proved that the license agreements were executed not as bona fide license agreements reasonably designed to secure to USG the pecuniary rewards of its patent monopoly but only as sham agreements to give color of legality to the illegal purposes alleged in the complaint, and has not proved that the operations of the defendants were carried beyond the proper limits of the USG patent monopoly, and therefore has not proved the combination and conspiracy charged. The evidence discussed in topics V and VI no more proves lack of bona fides in the execution of the license agreements, or operations beyond the limits of the patent monopoly, when the declarations are regarded as binding upon all of the alleged co-conspirators, than it does when such declarations are considered as binding only upon the declarant. This is necessarily so—in the view we take of the significance of the declarations. Since, as demonstrated in topics V and VI they fail to convict the declarants themselves of lack of bona fides in the execution of the licenses, or of operations beyond the proper limits of the USG patent monopoly, they cannot convict others thereof."

actions which were outside the scope of the patent grant. Specifically, the trial court found that there was no agreement among the defendants to raise the price of board to arbitrary and non-competitive levels, to standardize the production of board by pricing No. 2 board and seconds out of the market, to eliminate the production of open-edge board, to eliminate jobbers, to control the resale price of board sold to manufacturing distributors, or to stabilize the price of unpatented gypsum products. The court further held that as to all those charges except the last two the defendants would have been acting within the scope of the patent grant even if they had agreed to do the things charged. We conclude that regardless of motive, the Sherman Act bars patent exploitation of the kind that was here attempted. The license agreements and the bulletins establish the conspiracy of the licensor and each licensee to violate the Sherman Act. With the conspiracy thus fully established, the declarations and acts of the various members, even though made or done prior to the adherence of some to the conspiracy become admissible against all as declarations or acts of co-conspirators in aid of the conspiracy.[10] We think that all of the declarations and acts which we have set forth in this opinion are in aid of the ultimate conspiracy. We do not attempt to fix a date when the conspiracy was first formed. At least, the declarations which we have quoted were made with the purpose of advancing a plan which ultimately eventuated in the licenses of 1929.

IV.

We turn now to a different phase of the case—the correctness of the findings. The trial court made findings of fact which if accurate would bar a reversal of its order.

[10] Van Riper v. United States, 13 F. 2d 961, 967; Lefco v. United States, 74 F. 2d 66, 68; Deacon v. United States, 124 F. 2d 352, 358; United States v. Compagna, 146 F. 2d 524, 530.

In Finding 118 the trial court found that the evidence "fails to establish that the defendants associated themselves in a plan to blanket the industry under patent licenses and stabilize prices." The opinion indicates that in making this finding the trial court assumed arguendo that declarations of one defendant were admissible against all. 67 F. Supp. at 500. In examining the finding we follow Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, and United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, as to the quantum of proof required for the government to establish its claim that the defendants conspired to achieve certain ends. In those cases, as here, separate identical agreements were executed between one party and a number of other parties. This Court, in Interstate Circuit, concluded that proof of an express understanding that each party would sign the agreements was not a "prerequisite to an unlawful conspiracy." We held that it was sufficient if all the defendants had engaged in a concert of action within the meaning of the Sherman Act to enter into the agreements. In Masonite the trial court found that the defendants had not acted in concert and that finding was reversed by this Court. One of the things those two cases establish is the principle that when a group of competitors enters into a series of separate but similar agreements with competitors or others, a strong inference arises that such agreements are the result of concerted action. That inference is strengthened when contemporaneous declarations indicate that supposedly separate actions are part of a common plan.

In so far as Finding 118 and the subsidiary findings were based by the District Court on its belief that the General Electric rule justified the arrangements or because of a misapplication of Masonite or Interstate Circuit, errors of law occurred. These we can, of course, correct. In so far as this finding and others to which we shall refer are inferences drawn from documents or undisputed facts, heretofore described or set out, Rule 52 (a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure is applicable. That rule prescribes that findings of fact in actions tried without a jury "shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses." It was intended, in all actions tried upon the facts without a jury, to make applicable the then prevailing equity practice.[11] Since judicial review of findings of trial courts does not have the statutory or constitutional limitations of findings by administrative agencies[12] or by a jury,[13] this Court may reverse findings of fact by a trial court where "clearly erroneous." The practice in equity prior to the present Rules of Civil Procedure was that the findings of the trial court, when dependent upon oral testimony where the candor and credibility of the witnesses would best be judged, had great weight with the appellate court. The findings were never conclusive, however.[14] A finding is "clearly erroneous" when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

The government relied very largely on documentary exhibits, and called as witnesses many of the authors of the documents. Both on direct and cross-examination counsel were permitted to phrase their questions in extremely leading form, so that the import of the witnesses' testimony was conflicting. On cross-examination most of the witnesses denied that they had acted in concert in securing patent licenses or that they had agreed to do the things which in fact were done. Where such testimony is in conflict with contemporaneous documents we can give it little weight, particularly when the crucial issues involve mixed questions of law and fact. Despite the opportunity of the trial court to appraise the credibility of the witnesses, we cannot under the circumstances of this case rule otherwise than that Finding 118 is clearly erroneous.

In Findings 54, 56, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 89 and 90, the trial court made findings adverse to the government's claim that the defendants conspired to eliminate the production of open-edge board.[15] The tenor of those

[15] We quote Findings 54 and 89 as typical:

"54. The fact that for the privilege of using the patents, royalties are fixed in the license agreements at an amount equivalent to a designated percentage of the selling price of the licensees of all gypsum board manufactured by them, whether or not patented, does not establish an agreement to make only the patented product and does not establish that the license agreements were executed in bad faith. The patents were numerous and covered not only the patented board but machines and processes in the manufacture of board, and the rights and privileges granted were of great value to the manufacturers of gypsum board. This royalty provision is in effect a provision for a percentage of gross sales, and as such is but a convenient means of measuring the amount to be paid for the privilege of using the patents. It might with equal propriety have been a lump sum. This provision in the license agreements was not an attempt to impose a royalty upon an unpatented product, nor was it intended to drive open-edge board off the market, nor did it have that effect."

"89. The defendants did not by any of their operations under the license agreements, nor did they by any agreement or understanding, accomplish any improper standardization of gypsum board or its method of production, as charged by the Government."

findings is that there was no agreement among the licensees to discontinue the production of open-edge board, although the trial court conceded that it might be "inferred" that each licensee did not expect to continue the manufacture of open-edge board. The provision in the license contracts that royalties should be paid on the production of unpatented board is strongly indicative of an agreement not to manufacture unpatented board, and the testimony of the witnesses is ample to show that there was an understanding, if not a formal agreement, that only patented board would be sold. Such an arrangement in purpose and effect increased the area of the patent monopoly and is invalid.

In Findings 75–79, 99–102,[16] the trial court considered the problem of jobbers. Those findings state, in effect, that the license agreements were not executed with the intent of eliminating jobbers, that the discontinuance of the jobbers' discount was an exercise by United States Gypsum of its right to establish a price for a patented product, and that complaints by licensees that other licensees had sold to jobbers at a discount did not establish concerted action to eliminate jobbers. We are unable to agree to these holdings. Since the defendants entered into a common scheme to stabilize the industry, and since the elimi-

[16] We quote Findings 75 and 77 as typical:

"75. The license agreements were not executed with an intent to effectuate improper restriction upon the distribution of gypsum board, plaster or miscellaneous gypsum products, specifically, to 'eliminate' jobbers through the discontinuance of a sales discount."

"77. There was no agreement or understanding between any of the parties to the license agreements in the instant case whereby jobbers would be eliminated from the gypsum board distributive system. Nor was there any understanding or agreement that jobbers' discounts would be discontinued. The issuance of the bulletin of August 8, 1930 (Exhibit 430) making the price to jobbers the same as to dealers was the exercise of the right of USG to establish a price for the patented product."

nation of jobbers was undertaken by United States Gypsum in furtherance of that purpose, a finding of specific intent as to each licensee is not necessary. Nor do we agree that the elimination of jobbers falls within the protection of the patent grant when the purpose, as here, is to prevent competition by uncontrolled resale prices. The inference we draw from the uncontradicted evidence is that the defendants acted in concert to eliminate an important class of jobbers.

In Findings 73, 94–97,[17] the trial court dealt with the government's charge that the defendants had stabilized

[17] We quote Findings 73 and 95 as typical:

"73. There was at no time any understanding or agreement among any of the parties to the respective license agreements that the prices would be raised or fixed upon plaster or any unpatented gypsum product. Nor were the license agreements in the instant case executed with an intent to raise, maintain and stabilize the prices of unpatented materials such as plaster and miscellaneous gypsum products. The parties to the respective license agreements knew that the licensor's right to fix minimum prices was limited to the prices on patented board manufactured and sold by the respective licensees."

"95. The Bulletin provision that 'Any sale of patented products, though ostensibly made at or above the minimum price established by licensor, will nevertheless be considered a violation of the provisions of the license if licensee directly or indirectly reduces the actual price charged by licensee below such minimum price . . . by reducing the price of other products . . .' is but part of a larger provision concerning rebates and allowances made for the purpose and with the effect of reducing the licensee's price on patented board below the minimum price therefor—a price protective provision. It was not a device to raise, maintain or stabilize the price of plaster or miscellaneous gypsum products, and it was not applied by the defendants to that end. Nor did it have that effect. On the contrary the provision in question was a proper price protective measure reasonably designed to secure to USG the pecuniary reward of its patent monopoly. In operation, it was not used to raise, maintain or stabilize the price of unpatented materials."

the price of unpatented gypsum products. Those findings hold that there was no understanding or agreement that prices would be raised or fixed upon plaster or any unpatented product, that the bulletin provision prohibiting the reduction of price on unpatented products was designed to protect the price of patented board, and was not used to stabilize the price of unpatented materials. We reject all these findings as clearly erroneous. The bulletin provision and the complaints by licensees addressed to Board Survey convince us that the defendants attempted to stabilize plaster prices, and the fact that plaster prices were stabilized only when plaster was sold in conjunction with board appears to us to be immaterial.

The trial court made many other findings to which the government objected and yet to determine here whether each is erroneous is unnecessary.[18] Perhaps looked at in isolation some of the government's charges are not proven with that fullness that would justify our reversal of the finding of the District Court on the point. It may be that in the light of this opinion the District Court will conclude that many such findings are no longer significant in reaching its decision. As to others a different result will be required. Enough has been said as to the findings and the evidence, we think, to enable the District Court to pass upon the facts that may come before it on further proceedings in accord with our present ruling.

V.

The foregoing discussion foreshadows our conclusion. What we have said above under III on the invalidity of [18] Objection was made to those findings which held that the defendants had not conspired to fix resale prices of board sold to manufacturing distributors.

the arrangements as tested by the Sherman Act in discussing the admissibility of the declarations and acts of separate defendants against all others is applicable here. These licenses and bulletins show plainly a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. Price fixing of this type offends. It is well settled that price fixing, without authorizing statutes, is illegal, per se. See note 21, United States v. Line Material Co., decided today. Patents grant no privilege to their owners of organizing the use of those patents to monopolize an industry through price control, through royalties for the patents drawn from patent-free industry products and through regulation of distribution. Here patents have been put to such uses as to collide with the Sherman Act's protection of the public from evil consequences. United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319, 327; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 406; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, 170–74; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20. The defendants did undertake to control prices and distribution in gypsum board. They did utilize an agency, Board Survey, Inc., to make this control effective. Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 312 U. S. 457, 465. Such facts, together with the other indicia of intent to monopolize the gypsum board industry, hereinbefore detailed as to the agreements, bulletins and declarations, convinces us that the defendants violated the Sherman Act.

The General Electric case affords no cloak for the course of conduct revealed in the voluminous record in this case. That case gives no support for a patentee, acting in concert with all members of an industry, to issue substantially identical licenses to all members of the industry under the terms of which the industry is completely regimented, the production of competitive unpatented products suppressed, a class of distributors squeezed out, and prices on unpatented products stabilized. We apply the "rule of reason" of Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, to efforts to monopolize through patents as well as in non-patent fields. Even in the absence of the specific abuses in this case, which fall within the traditional prohibitions of the Sherman Act, it would be sufficient to show that the defendants, constituting all former competitors in an entire industry, had acted in concert to restrain commerce in an entire industry under patent licenses in order to organize the industry and stabilize prices. That conclusion follows despite the assumed legality of each separate patent license, for it is familiar doctrine that lawful acts may become unlawful when taken in concert.[19] Such concerted action is an effective deterrent to competition; as we said in Masonite, p. 281:

> "The power of Masonite to fix the price of the product which it manufactures, and which the entire group sells and with respect to which all have been and are now actual or potential competitors, is a powerful inducement to abandon competition. . . . Active and vigorous competition then tends to be impaired, not from any preference of the public for the patented product, but from the preference of the competitors for a mutual arrangement for price-fixing which promises more profit if the parties abandon rather than maintain competition. . . ."

The rewards which flow to the patentee and his licensees from the suppression of competition through the regulation of an industry are not reasonably and normally adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly.

By the record now presented, violation of the Sherman Act is clear. License Agreement.

This agreement made this 18th day of October, A. D. 1929, by and between the United States Gypsum Company, an Illinois corporation, of Chicago, Illinois, hereinafter referred to as Licensor, and Ebsary Gypsum Co., Inc. a New York corporation, of Newark, New Jersey, hereinafter referred to as Licensee, Witnesseth, that

2. Licensor has agreed to and does hereby give and grant unto Licensee an indivisible and non-exclusive right, license and privilege of using the process or processes and making and using the machines and/or inventions set forth and claimed in any and all of said patents and/or applications for letters patent set forth in Exhibit A attached hereto in the manufacture of gypsum plasterboard and/or gypsum wallboard at the plants or factories now owned and/or operated by Licensee, or at any other plant or factory hereafter owned and/or operated or controlled by it or any subsidiary, associated or affiliated company, and of manufacturing at any such place or places, selling and using in the United States of America and the territories and possessions thereof gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured at any such place or places and embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in said patents and/or applications for letters patent described in said Exhibit A, for the full term of said letters patent or of any letters patent which may be granted for or upon any of said applications, including any extensions and/or reissues thereof.

It is expressly understood and agreed that the indivisible and non-exclusive right, license and privilege aforesaid is granted upon condition that the Licensor shall have and it hereby reserves the right to determine and fix at any time and to change from time to time during the existence of said patents and so long as said license shall continue, the minimum price or prices at which Licensee shall sell any plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by Licensee by use of any of the machines or appliances covered by any of said letters patent and which shall embody the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in any of said patents which are presently issued, or any of said plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by second parties and which shall embody the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in either patent number 1,500,452 or patent number 1,230,297, or commencing with the date when a patent shall have been granted or issued for or upon any of the said Roos or Bayer inventions and/or applications any of said plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by Licensee, the body or core of which is made according to the process set forth and claimed in any patent granted for or upon any of said Roos or Bayer inventions and/or applications, and in case Licensor shall exercise the right so reserved, it shall first serve written notice of its intention so to do upon Licensee, accompanied with a statement of the minimum price or prices at which Licensee shall sell said gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard, and thereafter shall give to Licensee written or telegraphic notice of any change in such price or prices, and Licensee expressly covenants and agrees that it will not, so long as this agreement shall continue in force and effect and after receipt of such notice given in accordance with the terms and conditions hereof, directly or indirectly, sell or offer for sale any gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by it by use of any of the machines or appliances covered by any of said patents and which during the existence thereof shall embody the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in any of said patents which are presently issued, or any gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by second parties and which during the existence thereof shall embody the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in either patent number 1,500,452 or patent number 1,230,297, or any gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard manufactured by Licensee after a patent shall have issued upon any of the said Roos or Bayer inventions and/or applications and during the existence thereof, the body or core of which is made according to the process set forth and claimed in any patent granted for or upon any of said inventions and/or applications, at a price or prices less than that stated by Licensor in said notice or in any such written or telegraphic notice of a change in such price or prices.

Said minimum price shall not be more than that price at which Licensor determines to sell plasterboard or gypsum wallboard embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in said patents to its own like trade in the same market.

3. Licensee agrees to pay to Licensor for said disclosures, information and assistance and the agreements of Licensor herein contained, and for the right, license and privilege of using the processes and making and using the machines and/or inventions in the manufacture of plasterboard and gypsum wallboard covered by said patents and applications for letters patent described in said Exhibit A, and for the privilege of manufacturing, using and/or selling plasterboard and gypsum wallboard embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in said patents and applications for letters patent, an amount (hereinafter for convenience referred to as a license fee or royalty) equivalent to three and one-half per cent (3½%) of the selling price of Licensee of all plasterboard and gypsum wallboard of every kind, whether or not made by the use of said machines and/or embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in said letters patent or applications for letters patent, manufactured and sold by Licensee between the date hereof and February 10, 1937, the date of the expiration of patent number 1,330,413 mentioned in said Exhibit A, and thereafter an amount equivalent to two per cent (2%) of the selling price of Licensee of all such plasterboard and gypsum wallboard manufactured and sold by it between February 10, 1937, and July 8, 1941, the date of the expiration of said patent number 1,500,452, and thereafter an amount equivalent to one per cent (1%) of the selling price of Licensee of all such plasterboard and gypsum wallboard manufactured and sold by it between July 8, 1941, and the date of the expiration of the last to expire of any patent granted or issued for or upon any of the said Roos or Bayer applications; . . .

5. It is expressly understood and agreed that the license herein granted shall be personal to the Licensee, and that the same or any right herein or thereunder shall not be sold or assigned or transferred without the written consent of Licensor, or transferred by operation of law; Provided, However, that the same may be assigned by Licensee to any company acquiring all the assets and business or all of the capital stock of Licensee, on condition that Licensee shall first obtain an agreement in writing from any such assignee agreeing to assume all of the obligations of Licensee under this agreement and to be bound by all of the terms and conditions hereof and shall deliver such agreement to Licensor. Licensee agrees not to sell all of its assets and business or all of its capital stock or to transfer and convey its plasterboard and/or wallboard business, or its assets used in connection therewith, without requiring the purchaser or purchasers thereof to assume, in writing, all of the obligations of Licensee hereunder, and to agree to be bound by all of the terms and conditions of this contract, and deliver such agreement to Licensor.

6. Licensee agrees to keep separate full and accurate books of accounts and records showing the exact quantity of all plasterboard and gypsum wallboard manufactured and sold by it, as well as a separate record of all plasterboard and/or gypsum wallboard sold by it in bundles, ...

7. Licensor, or its duly authorized representative, shall have the right at all reasonable times during business hours to inspect the books of account and records of Licensee referred to in the next preceding paragraph hereof, including all records of every kind showing the quantity of said plasterboard and gypsum wallboard manufactured and sold by it and the quantity thereof put up and sold by it in bundles and the price or prices at which the same was sold, and to make copies thereof and memoranda therefrom; . . . .

9. Having regard for the fact that there are or may be certain manufacturers of plaster or gypsum products, jobbers or other wholesale distributors of such products, who do not or may not manufacture gypsum wallboard or plasterboard but who desire or may desire to have gypsum wallboard or plasterboard manufactured for them, it is understood and agreed that Licensee may manufacture for jobbers (being those who do not manufacture but buy and sell plasterboard or gypsum wallboard in straight cars or in mixed cars with other building material and who do not sell at retail) gypsum wallboard or plasterboard embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in said letters patent or in any letters patent after the same shall have been issued, granted for or upon any of the said applications and may with the written consent of first party manufacture for any such other manufacturer or other wholesale distributor, gypsum wallboard or plasterboard embodying the said inventions and improvements; Provided, However, that the said license fee or royalty to be paid to Licensor as hereinbefore provided shall be based upon all gypsum wallboard and plasterboard manufactured for and sold and invoiced to such other manufacturer, jobber or wholesale distributor and upon the regular selling price of Licensee of such plasterboard or gypsum wallboard to its regular dealer trade at the time of such sale and invoice, and shall not be based upon the price at which plasterboard or gypsum wallboard is sold and invoiced by Licensee to such other manufacturer, jobber or wholesale distributor. Nothing hereinbefore contained in this agreement shall be construed to give Licensee the right to manufacture gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard embodying the inventions and improvements set forth and claimed in any of said letters patent or in any letters patent after the same shall have geen granted for or upon any of said applications for said other manufacturers or wholesale distributors and to sell the same, without the written consent of Licensor.

12. In the event that either party shall at any time neglect, fail or refuse to keep or perform any of the conditions or agreements herein to be kept by it and performed, then the other party, at its election, may serve upon the party in default written notice of intention to terminate this license, which notice shall specify the alleged neglect, failure or refusal, and if within thirty (30) days from the date of delivery of said notice the party in default shall not cure the default specified in said notice, then the other party may cancel and terminate this agreement by notifying the party in default in writing of its election so to do, without the necessity of any court action; . . . .

15. In case Licensor shall, subsequent to the effective date hereof, grant to any other person except Abel Davis and Eugene Holland, receivers of the Universal Gypsum & Lime Co. or their successors or to the said Universal Gypsum & Lime Co., any license under said patents or applications for letters patent set forth in said Exhibit A and paragraph 4 hereof for the manufacture, sale or use of gypsum plasterboard or gypsum wallboard or bundles thereof, embodying the claims or inventions set forth and claimed in said patents or said applications, or shall grant any right under any such license, upon terms more favorable than those granted hereunder to this Licensee, then it will grant to this Licensee a license on the same terms or extend to it the same right granted to any such other person. This paragraph shall not apply to any license granted on or prior to the effective date hereof, nor shall the same apply to the terms of settlement of any claim of Licensor or provisions with respect to the payment thereof, contained in any such license.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 13.—October Term, 1947.

The United States of America, Appellant, v. United States Gypsum Company et al.	On Appeal From the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

[March 8, 1948.]

Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring.

In Part II of the opinion the Court confessedly deals with an issue that "need not be decided to dispose of this case." Deliberate dicta, I had supposed, should be deliberately avoided. Especially should we avoid passing gratuitously on an important issue of public law where due consideration of it has been crowded out by complicated and elaborate issues that have to be decided. Accordingly, I join in the Court's opinion, except Part II.

The Court is agreed that the arrangements challenged by the Government as violative of the Sherman Law cannot find shelter under the patent law, howsoever valid the patents of the defendants may be. In short, we have found that the validity of the patents in the suit is irrelevant to the invalidity of the arrangements based upon them. While fully recognizing this, the Court needlessly considers the question whether the Government may, in view of United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224, attack the validity of the patents in the present proceeding.

It does so because "it seems inadvisable to leave as a precedent the decision" of the trial court that "the Government was estopped to attack the validity of the patents in the present proceeding." But, surely, it is easy enough to sterilize the trial court's decision by the explicit declaration that the issue need not be decided.

I shall not follow the Court's lead and indulge in dicta on the question whether, in a suit like this, the issue of patentability can be contested by the Government. But, as bearing upon the undesirability of announcing dicta on this issue, it is pertinent to point out that the cases on which the Court relies for its pronouncement hardly dispose of the problem. They are cases in which a licensee resisted claims for royalties on what purported to be valid patents. Royalties were refused because there were no patents on which they were owed. Such was the issue involved in Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co., 317 U. S. 173; Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Mfg. Co., 329 U. S. 394; MacGregor v. Westinghouse Co., 329 U. S. 402. Different considerations come into play when the Government seeks a declaration of invalidity. See United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., supra. I am not remotely intimating that the differences are decisive. I am merely suggesting that a due weighing of the differences, in the light of the Bell Telephone case, should await the duty of adjudication. It should not be the undesirable product of deliberate dicta.

The Court refers to Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, 240, as reason for passing on an issue that "need not be decided to dispose of this case," because "it seems inadvisable to leave the [trial court's] decision as a precedent." As to our problem, Hurn v. Oursler was exactly the opposite from this case. The issue on which this Court pronounced in Hurn v. Oursler was inescapably the issue that had to be decided to dispose of the case.

The issue in Hurn v. Oursler was this: where a suit for infringement of a copyrighted play was brought in a federal court and with it was joined a non-federal cause of action based on unfair competition in regard to that play, has the federal court jurisdiction to pass on the merits of the claim of unfair competition after the court had rejected the federally-based suit of infringement?

The trial court held not, and dismissed the non-federal claim for want of jurisdiction after dismissing the federal claim on the merits. When the case came here this Court could not possibly sustain the trial court (which had been affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals) without necessarily affirming the trial court's ruling on the issue of jurisdiction. This Court reversed the trial court on that issue and held that the district court had jurisdiction. It found, however, that the cause of action should have been dismissed but on the merits. Accordingly, this Court modified the decree so that the dismissal was on the merits and not for want of jurisdiction. This Court could not have reached the merits without first determining whether there was jurisdiction to reach them. In short, in Hurn v. Oursler the precedent of the district court had to be set aside in order to decide the case. Here, the "precedent" of the district court is upon an issue which is essentially irrelevant, and therefore we should not follow the error of the district court in pronouncing upon an issue which "need not be decided to dispose of this case."
